Nixon to Decide Final Calley Fate

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)—President Nixon announced Saturday he will personally review and make the military's final decision in the case of Lt. William L. Calley Jr., sentenced to life imprisonment for the premeditated murder of civilians at My Lai.

The Western White House said Nixon acted in the wake of widespread questions about the fate of the young officer, whose a former attorney general in Massachusetts; Treasury Secretary John N. Connally and presidential counselor Robert H. Finch who were in California. He also had been in close touch with Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird and Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell in Washington.

Confined to Quarters
Less than a day after the military at Ft. Benning, Ga., sentenced Calley on Wednesday to life imprisonment the President had ordered that Calley be removed from the stockade and confined to his quarters throughout the review of his case.

Ehrlichman said the President didn't feel that under the circumstances "it was proper, correct, or desirable for a lieutenant to be in the stockade pending this long review process."

He had asked his aides Thursday to check on his legal prerogatives and when advised he could take his step, he did, Ehrlichman said.

The White House has been deluged with thousands of messages it said were running 100 to 1 in favor of clemency for Calley.

'Quiet Clamor'
Asked whether Nixon had acted to "quiet public clamor," Ehrlichman said that wasn't one of the motives.

There had been enough sincere questions raised over Calley's fate to deserve an answer, he said. The appeals for clemency, Ehrlichman said, were "all the way across the spectrum even from people known to be critical of the war effort."

The President will let the case go through the regular military review process, which Ehrlichman said included two military boards of review and the secretary of the Army.

Anywhere along the line the sentence could be reduced, but never increased, he said. The Uniform Code of Military Justice would not provide for appeals or mandatory review by the President in this case because it doesn't involve the death penalty.

The secretary of the Army, Ehrlichman pointed out, has very broad discretionary powers to commute or remit the case has drawn worldwide attention.

A spokesman said the President would make his review after the case went through regular legal appeal channels provided in the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Review Case
Before any sentence can be put into operation for Calley, Nixon will review the case and personally decide it, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler announced.

Nixon's special assistant and former counsel, John Ehrlichman who was with Ziegler at the announcement, explained that Nixon was involving his inherent powers as commander in chief. He said the President wanted to add another ingredient—more than "stark legal issues"—after it goes through the legal process of appeals provided under the code of military justice.

Asked what his extra nonlegal review would bring to bear on the case, Ehrlichman said: "That's sort of in the heart of a man."

Not Unusual
The presidential assistant said this was not an unusual procedure and pointed to the precedent of several Civil War cases in which President Abraham Lincoln concerned himself.

He cited the famous one in which Lincoln remitted the sentence of a Union soldier accused of falling asleep on sentry duty. He also pointed to a case in which Lincoln stepped in but upheld a sentence handed down on a soldier.

Avoiding any comment on the merits of the case or hinting in any way as to what penalty Nixon thinks or should not be imposed on Calley, Ehrlichman explained the President's action in this way:

Captured Interest
"The President felt, in this case having captured the interest of the American people as it has, that it was important for him to make clear at this stage, that it would include more than the legal process the military code of justice provides."

Ehrlichman said that the Calley case has held the attention of the President in the last few days of his 10-day stay at the Western White House. An attorney himself, Nixon consulted with members of his Cabinet who happen to be lawyers, including Ehrlichman, Welfare Secretary Elliot L. Richardson, NEOPIT — The affairs of Menominee Enterprises, Inc., including selection of its directors, will remain in the hands of a board of trustees for 10 more years — unless an opposition group succeeds in court to reverse the outcome of a shareholders meeting Saturday.

Most of the shares voting favored eliminating the Menominee Common Stock and Voting Trust and giving control of the all-Menominee corporation more directly to shareholders. But a majority of all shares was required to vote out the trust, and the vote fell short.

Some 119,320 shares voted to eliminate the trust, with 118,516 to retain it. However, half the total shares is 157,834, and this is the required number for dissolving the trust.

Leaders of the opposition group, called DRUMS, said they now are counting on winning in the courtroom the victory they narrowly missed Saturday.

The immediate object of the courtroom challenge is the First Wisconsin Bank & Trust Co., Milwaukee, which voted 48,777 shares in favor of continuing the trustee arrangement. By law, it must come up every 10 years for a vote to continue or abolish it. Saturday's was the first such vote.

Minors' Shares
The shareholders holds the shares of minors or Menominee who were declared incompetent at the time the Menominee Reservation was terminated in 1961.

DRUMS has filed an appeal in Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago against a recent ruling by Federal District Judge Myron L. Gordon, Milwaukee, who upheld the First Wisconsin arrangement, decreed under terms of the Congressional-adopted Termination Act.

Joseph Preloznik, head of the

which is providing much of the Bay, to tabulate the votes. Accountant Leland Denis announced the outcome after more than 2½ hours of vote-counting and cross-checking, to make certain no-one had voted twice in the months-long proxy fight preceding the meeting.

War Whoops
"It appears that we are 38,514 votes short of enough votes to terminate the trust," Denis announced, after reading the vote totals. Shouts and war whoops went up from supporters of the voting trust. Most of the DRUMS supporters were silent but a few boomed.

Miss Ada Deer, a Menominee on the Stevens Point State University faculty and an originator of DRUMS, declared: "This is a very significant victory."

She explained that her group, while failing to turn out the voting trust, nevertheless drew a majority and brought out the heaviest vote ever in a tribal election. Traditionally, the Menominees have had a poor record of participation in tribal and Enterprises meetings and elections.

The election was preceded during the morning by 90 minutes of carefully regulated debate, with opponents and supporters of the voting trust taking turns speaking while Morrison timed them.

Qualified to Decide?
A central argument was whether Menominees are qualified to make their own decisions or need the board of trustees to act for them.

"Who among us is really educated enough to run a corporation?" asked Mrs. Irene Mack, Neopit. "I have not the education, I have not the foresight" to make corporate decisions, added Mrs. Florence Small.

"I am competent, I am educated, and our people are educated," retorted Mrs. Shirley Daley, a DRUMS supporter. "I consider it an insult" to have others make decisions for her, she said.

"I want a voice in my affairs. The land is being sold and I want to know why," she said.

She referred to the sale of land at the Lakes of the Menominees development outside Keshena, a major object of DRUMS anger.

Speakers favoring trust said the trustees have protected the interests of Menominees the past 10 years. The answer from DRUMS was that the trustees

Hanoi Overextended

Enemy Drive in 1972 Unlikely

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)—As President Nixon readies a new troop withdrawal announcement, the administration is contending that the incursion into Laos makes a major enemy military drive unlikely for about 18 months.

By that reckoning, it would seem doubtful that North Vietnamese forces could push a big campaign to conclusion prior to America's 1972 presidential election.

At the same time, however, a knowledgeable administration source said continued withdrawals of U.S. troops means an American-supported military move on the scale of Laos would not be possible in 1972.

Nixon now has reached the point where he is putting in final form the television-radio address he will make next Wednesday to announce continued withdrawals. He is said to be doing the writing himself, making major alterations in staff-prepared drafts.

The Western White House turns aside all inquiries about what Nixon will say, insisting that whatever decisions he makes known will not be fixed until he completes his writing chore.

The President has said withdrawals after May 1 will continue at a rate at least equal to the 12,500-man monthly average of the past year. By May 1 the American force level in South Vietnam will stand at 284,000.

Nixon added to anticipation about his address by remarking in a March 22 television interview that his announcement, "I am sure, will give some indication as to the end of the tunnel."

Sources declined to speculate on the scale of future withdrawals or the time span to be covered. They were silent, when asked about published speculation from Washington that Nixon might withdraw all forces by a fixed date should Hanoi agree to release American prisoners of war.

One source said the recently concluded operations in Laos, while not achieving all their goals, have effectively nullified the threat of enemy offensives during the current dry period. He expressed the view that it would take about 18 months for the North Vietnamese to restore supply pipelines, overcome heavy combat casualties and mount a campaign in a major way.

This informant described Hanoi as extremely overextended in three countries and said the United States has evidence of war weariness and low morale in the North.

Because of Laos, he said, the North Vietnamese ability to operate militarily in the two northernmost corps areas of the South has been severely impaired and the possibility of a sustained offensive elsewhere has been virtually eliminated.

The source acknowledged that the South Vietnamese had some problems while fighting in Laos but said that with a few exceptions they fought extremely well.

As complicating factors, he reported that the Laos incursion marked the first time the South Vietnamese had faced tanks and concentrated artillery while fighting also for the first time without the aid of American ground to air communications. He had Americans entered Laos to direct artillery and air support, he said, the foray would have been much more successful. But he said such a move obviously would have been politically unacceptable to the American public.

At the same time, he did not deny reports that American officials felt the South Vietnamese should have remained longer in Laos. He simply stated that the United States understood Saigon's decision.

Childhood Leukemia Is Curable

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP)—The director of the government's National Cancer Institute said Saturday, in an unusual pronouncement, that childhood leukemia probably could now be listed among the relatively few cancers that are curable.

Dr. Carl Baker, addressing the 13th Annual Seminar for Science Writers, sponsored by the American Cancer Society, said it is too early to be absolutely sure about the cure potential for leukemia.

But, in the strongest statement yet made by a government medical official in the leukemia field, he also said: "It is probable that childhood leukemia is properly included among examples of cured cancers."

Stay With Costs, Panel Says

Adjustable Medicare Urged

By MARTHA COLE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A blue-ribbon advisory council recommended Saturday a change in the Social Security law to permit automatic adjustments in benefits to keep up with a rising cost of living.

Congress now sets the levels for each year. The council said also that minimum benefits to low-paid workers, now and in the future, should be enough so that the aged beneficiaries will not be below the poverty level.

These were among 25 recommendations made by the council, which was appointed almost two years ago under a provision of the Social Security law which calls for a review of the program and health insurance programs every four years

Arthur S. Flemming, president of Macalester College and a former secretary of the Health, Education and Welfare Department, headed the 13-member nongovernmental council.

The present secretary, Elliot L. Richardson, released the report without comment except to note that over the years the recommendations of the various advisory councils have played an important role in shaping the present program.

Copies of the latest report have been sent to members of Congress.

Include Drugs

On medicare, the council recommended that coverage, now for people 65 years old or over, be extended to those receiving Social Security benefits because of disability.

It said also that medicare coverage should be extended to include prescription drugs outside the hospital.

In providing automatic adjustments in Social Security benefits the council said the contribution-and-benefit base and the retirement test exempt amount should be adjusted automatically also to provide for larger benefits.

The maximum amount of annual earnings that is taxable for Social Security should be increased to $12,000 in 1974, it said, and automatically kept up to date. The limit now is $7,800.

Other recommendations included:

Other Changes

—The number of years over which earnings are averaged in figuring benefit amounts and the period used to determine the amount of covered employment necessary to qualify for benefits should end with the beginning of the year in which a man reaches 62, the same as for women. Now it is 65 for men.

—The retirement test on how much a beneficiary can earn without losing Social Security benefits should be changed to enable beneficiaries to increase their earnings without disadvantage. The council recommended a $2,000 limit on earnings instead of the present $1,600.

—Benefits for widows and dependent widowers should be increased.

On financing, the council said the cash benefits program is actuarially sound. It said, however, that the hospital insurance trust fund will be exhausted in 1973 unless income is increased.

Newsman Is Consultant To President

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)—Veteran diplomatic correspondent John A. Scali is joining President Nixon's staff as a full-time consultant, it was learned Saturday.

Scali, 52, will act in broad fields, including domestic as well as foreign policy, but is expected to concentrate on efforts to improve administration communications with the public. He will not serve, however, on the staff of press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler.

Diplomatic correspondent for the American Broadcasting Co. since 1961, Scali for 17 years previously had been a reporter for The Associated Press.

Scali's most sensational exploit as a newsmen came in 1962 when he acted as a secret intermediary between President John F. Kennedy and the Soviet Embassy in Washington during the Cuban missile crisis. Kennedy credited him with playing a key role in successful efforts to avoid a nuclear confrontation between the two countries.

Marvin Heiden Retires From First National

Marvin Heiden began banking 45 years ago as a messenger and clerk at the old Citizens National Bank, formerly at College and Oneida. Last week, he retired from First National Bank where he was vice president and cashier.

He also relinquished his responsibilities as secretary and treasurer of First National Corp., six-year-old bank holding company. But he will continue as a consultant to the bank.

He was honored Wednesday night at the Left Guard Charcoal House in a retirement dinner sponsored by the bank. Heiden, 64, joined Citizens in 1925 after being chosen from three students interviewed by the bank in the Appleton High School commercial class. He started at $50 per month.

"It was a job," he said. "I hadn't really pointed in any direction (for a career) at that point."

In 1931, the bank was merged with First National. Through the years he moved up in the ranks. His position included assistant auditor, auditor, controller and auditor, cashier, and then in 1960, cashier and vice president. He participated in the holding company's formation.

Heiden, who was born on a farm south of Black Creek in 1907, leaves a long list of community activities. He was

700 in Region Last Year

Unfair Labor Charges Increasing

An increase in unfair labor charges against employers and labor unions was blamed for the record 700 cases filed with the National Labor Relations Board in Milwaukee last year. Some 572 were filed in 1969.

George Squillacote, regional director, said that virtually all the expanded caseload was accounted for by this increase rather than an increase in petitions to the board for elections to determine whether labor organizations were entitled to bargaining rights.

Charges of unfair labor practices grew 39 per cent over those filed in 1969. Squillacote said the extra burden was more severe since, throughout 1970, the local office staff was down 25 per cent over previous levels due to budgetary cutbacks.

Region 30 of the Board, Milwaukee-based, processes cases involving unfair labor practices and representation matters throughout most of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan. The Board handles cases involving individuals employed by private employers but does not have jurisdiction over matters involving state, county or municipal employees.

There were 418 unfair labor practice charges and 282 representation petitions filed by unions, employers, and individuals in 1970. Despite this record intake, 390 unfair labor practice cases and 257 representation matters were closed during the year.

Of the 390 unfair labor practice cases closed in 1970, some 117, or 30 per cent, were found to have merit — that is that a probable violation of the law had occurred. The majority of these matters involved charges of discriminatory layoffs and discharges for union activities.

The Region achieved voluntary settlement in 77 per cent of these cases, and 114 employees were determined to be entitled to reinstatement to their jobs.

In representation matters, of the 257 cases filed, 193 elections were conducted. Unions won bargaining rights in 96 elections, or 48 per cent. In this regard the unions' success percentage was less than the previous year's 58 per cent.

Fox Valley Counties Receive Benefits From Highway Tax

Cities, towns and villages in Outagamie, Calumet, Winnebago and Waupaca Counties have been sent their shares of over $362,000, the first installment of more than $50 million in highway user taxes.

The taxes are collected by the state and returned to local municipal governments during the year. The money from the state Division of Highways is to be used for improvements to local public roads and streets. Separate allocations are made to county governments for highways.

A total of $40,624 was distributed in Calumet County to the following municipalities: Appleton, $5,265; Chilton, $1,587; Kiel, $150; New Holstein, $1,605; Brillion, $1,348; Hilbert, $233; Sherwood, $99; Stockbridge, $251; and nine towns, $29,892.

Outagamie County received $129,423 to be divided among New London, $841; Seymour, $1,233; Kaukauna, $10,142; Appleton, $65,929; Bear Creek, $230; Black Creek, $286; Combined Locks, $464; Hortonville, $404; Kimberly, $1,086; Little Chute, $1,038; Nichols, $177; Shiocton, $246; and 20 towns, $47,281.

Some $69,503 was returned to Waupaca County for the following distribution: Clintonville, $2,913; Manawa, $663; Marion, $990; New London, $2,704; Waupaca, $2,938; Weyauwega, $1,310; Big Falls, $91; Embarrass,

Your Life Insurance

QUESTION: I want to leave my group life insurance to my family. I have heard it can be done tax-free. What are the particulars?

ANSWER: Your question is conditional in two areas. The Internal Revenue Service holds that life insurance is a part of a decedent's estate and subject to Federal estate tax unless all rights of ownership have been relinquished by the insured.

The legality of transferring ownership of a group life insurance policy depends upon the state in which you reside. Until recently, under many state laws, it was impossible to assign group policies to another party, as there were conditions involved which could not be transferred. These included the right to convert the policy to an individual policy on leaving the company or retiring. Twenty-three states have already revised their laws to permit an effective assignment, and others are following suit. When the aforementioned new state laws apply, the group policyholder can transfer the policy to his beneficiary tax-free. You should make this kind of change only after a careful study of your estate and family circumstances, for once you have given the policy away, there is no way to reclaim it.

QUESTION: There is so much talk of "equal opportunity" of employment today, but I have not found a single female life insurance agent. Is it really a "man's world"?

ANSWER: If you have not encountered a woman life insurance agent, it is rather remarkable. Some estimates suggest that there are nearly 40,000 women agents in the country, many of whom have made an outstanding success of their work. In fact, several years ago, a woman was elected president of the American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters. There is a Women Leaders Round Table which boasts of a membership of 500 women, all of whom have qualified by meeting the minimum sales mark of $250,000 life insurance per year. A recent tally revealed that the Round Table members actually average $500,000 in sales, with 17 of the members selling over $1,000,000 in a single year. Many of these women have become experts on business insurance, tax insurance, estate planning and other areas of advanced underwriting. More and more women are assuming executive positions in company head offices. As you can see, women are involved quite successfully in the life insurance business; they're just too busy to be noticed.

QUESTION: If a buy a variable annuity, is there any way I can get a guarantee of some specified minimum income when I retire?

ANSWER: If you want a fixed income annuity for life, you should have a fixed-dollar annuity. The very purpose of a variable annuity is to provide a "variable income," not a guaranteed income. In times of rising equity values and corporate profits, the variable annuity, with its more liberal investment portfolio, is expected to produce a larger income. On the other hand, when corporate profits shrink from either inflation or deflation, it would probably produce a smaller income. Consequently, insurance companies and agents widely recommend that not all of an annuity plan be placed on a variable basis. Some companies require that the plan be 50 per cent variable-50 per cent fixed. Perhaps you should consider such an arrangement. It offers a guaranteed minimum income, the amount paid by the fixed annuity, and enables you to reap an increase through the variable annuity when the opportunity arises.

So far nobody knows how good Easter Sunday Dinner is at the Neenah Ramada Inn. How could they? We weren't even here last Easter. But we have a reputation to uphold, nevertheless . . . the reputation of our fine old predecessor, the famous Valley Inn, which served many an Easter dinner . . . and every one a splendid one. That's the kind ours will be.

Is Lake Erie Really Near Death?

BY JOE WING
If the scariest fear of Stanley P. Spisiak comes to pass, Lake Erie won't merely die. It will vanish.
It was Spisiak who coined the phrase "Lake Erie is dying" nearly 30 years ago, he recalls, and started a controversy still very much alive. An executive of the privately organized New York State Conservation Council, he is also a jeweler and realtor in Buffalo as well as an articulate and concerned lake watcher.

Right now he is concerned about the possibility that a man-triggered earthquake might break down the escarpment raised by some ancient quake at Niagara Falls. Along with other hard-to-imagine disasters, such a cataclysm would drain the lake.

A major quake could occur in a danger area running from Erie, Pa., northeast through Buffalo, N. Y., Spisiak asserts on the basis of an Ohio river water commission report. As recently as 1966, he says, one stronger than the Los Angeles quake struck a sparsely settled sector of that region but got little notice.

Spisiak recently urged top New York state officials to bar Bethlehem Steel from pushing the starter button on a system for getting rid of noxious pickling fluid by injecting it under pressure into a 4,400-foot well at Lackawanna, N.Y. He is convinced, however, that a number of illegal wells are already operating and that this might have touched off the 1966 quake.

It was injection of liquified phosgene gas into a well at the Rocky Mountain arsenal, Spisiak says, that prompted a series of tremors in Colorado and caused the Army to start dumping the stuff in the ocean instead. Critics blamed not only the pressure but the lubricating quality of liquids, and asserted moreover that the gas might show up eventually in drinking water or streams.

Earthquakes aside, is Erie really "dead," as Gene Marine wrote a couple of years ago in "America the Raped"?

Spisiak thinks that because of widespread and increasing use of illegal oil dispersants, among other things, the dying process is still speeding up. Other like-minded but less well informed persons must have been surprised, therefore, when commercial fishing was banned in the lake for a time during the mercury scare. Commercial fishing in a "dead" lake?

"There is more life going on in Lake Erie now than there ever has been in the past," writes Dr. Dean E. Arnold of the University of Michigan in "The Conservationist," though he adds the lake is deteriorating rapidly from a human viewpoint.

"Sure," comments Spisiak, "and there's more life than ever in a room where a cat dies and gets covered with maggots."

There's a basis for this analogy because, as Dr. Arnold points out, very few high-priced fish like sturgeon and whitefish are now caught in the lake, while the haul of cheap, pollution-tolerant carp and such as multiplied. The catch of blue pike sank from 18.8 million pounds in 1956 to 500 pounds in 1965. Much of today's coarse fish catch is sold for cat and dog food.

Mayflies, which like clean water, are no longer abundant, whereas blue green algae, thriving on pollution, covered an 800-square-mile area in the lake's western basin some time ago.

Yet the Army Engineers regard the lake as still "an excellent source of municipal raw water," and a spokesman old me recently it's hard for an individual looking out from some murky harbor like Buffalo, Cleveland or Detroit to assay the waters of the lake.

Though it is the shallowest of the Great Lakes, with a water volume by far the smallest, Erie's 9,940-square-mile area makes it one of the world's dozen largest. It might almost be called three lakes — he comparatively isolated western basin where most of the sediment and filth concentrates, the deeper central basin, and the deepest, coldest, clearest eastern basin.

Lumping them together, director George Harlow of the Federal Water Quality Administration's Lake Erie Basin office at Cleveland concedes:

"Dying is right; all lakes are dying. Erie's process has been faster, but it's a long ways from dead. We are trying to prolong its life."

Without hard evidence, since the last overall study was made in 1967, Harlow gives you the impression nevertheless that things are looking up.

Sewage plant construction is scheduled at more than 200 towns and industries, though completion isn't expected until 1977 and it will take over six years thereafter for the lake to cleanse itself. Capital costs of construction on the U. S. side have been estimated at $1.373 billion, plus $3 billion for municipal sewers, plus land acquisition and debt service.

One optimist, George Eagle, chief engineer of the Ohio Department of Health, says he "likes to think the lake is getting better," as new secondary controls on effluents are instituted, mostly by the end of this year, though Cleveland is lagging.

It was the Cuyahoga River running through Cleveland and Akron that Rep. Louis Styles has said "would live in infamy as the only river in the world to be proclaimed a fire hazard." The last time it caught fire, in 1969, it did $100,000 damage to two bridges.

But its fame is downgraded by Spisiak who says the Buffalo River fired up three times since the widely publicized event on the Cuyahoga. The Buffalo used to float blankets of oil at times but now he charges little is in evidence because industries spray it surreptitiously with dispersants. That sinks the oil but ruins life on the bottom. He asserted that other industries around the lake have followed suit.

Oil and effluents and phosphate-charged sewage aren't the only villains. — Overall, there is the pressure of population which Prof. Lyle E. Craine of Michigan predicts will rise from 7 to 60 million in the Great Lakes basin by century's end.

— Then there's the warming of the lake with temperatures rising 2 degrees since 1920 and threatening such fish as yellow perch.

— Overfishing has been blamed for the plummeting of some fish populations such as lake herring.

— Smoke settling on the lake deposits harmful chemicals.

— Gas well drilling, largely prohibited by U. S. states, goes on apace in Ontario waters, though Canadian authorities deny it pollutes. Each country is treaty-bound not to pollute border waters. The International Joint Commission has urged repeatedly that a cleanup be expedited. Canada expects to bar phosphate detergents by 1971.

— Modern farming sluices nitrogen and other chemicals as well as eroded soil into the lake.

— Silt spewed out by the Maumee, Cuyahoga, Raisin, Detroit and other rivers cuts off light and changes the bottom.

— To rid harbors of sediment, Army Engineers dredge them regularly, spreading the pollution by dumping it in deeper lake areas. Ever ready with solutions, the Engineers say they could dump the sludge at greatly increased cost on land, but point out this would damage shore habitats.

So what do you do, close down the ports? That's a problem you might ponder before cussing the authorities too much or offering quick solutions of your own. Dr. Arnold writes, "rehabilitation of the (lake) environment seems almost impossible."

Treasury to Release Rare Silver Dollars

BY CLEMENT F. BAILEY, N.L.G.

OLD BUSINESS
More than 2.8 million rare silver coins are to be sold for the U.S. Treasury by the General Services Administration. Many of the dollars are still in the original mint sealed bags which came from the Carson City Mint. In addition to the mint marked "CC" coins there are some other silver dollars of miscellaneous dates and mints. The necessary machinery has not been in treasury vaults, are listed below.

Date	Estimated Quantity
1876	61,000
1879	5,000
1880	131,000
1881	147,000
1882	607,000
1883	759,000
1884	968,000
1885	150,000
1890	4,000
1891	5,000

NEW BUSINESS

Each year, as regular as spring, the American Numismatic Association (ANA) declares its "National Coin Week." This year the theme is "Numismatics — The Hobby of All Ages." April 18 through 24 is NCW and all ANA clubs and individual members are urged to go forth and spread the word.

COMMENT

The sale of silver dollars by the General Services Administration has been greeted by "boos" and "hurrahs." One side feels that the GSA is treading on private enterprise and going into direct competition with established coin dealers. They will sell the coins at prices which have been established by the hobby, reaping a harvest with little investment. On the other hand it has been pointed out that the coins are going to be saved from the melting pot. From the facts we have gathered it is doubted if the "average collector" will have a chance at the GSA sale.

Numismatic Notes

set up for the sale, and it will do no good to contact the GSA. Forms will be available when the plans have been set. Each collector is to be limited to ten coins in a type of grab bag package with prices being what the traffic will bear.

The Carson City Mint which used the "CC" mint mark (mint marks on the silver dollars of the type involved occurred under the eagle on the reverse) existed for 23 years and they minted coins for only 20 years. The mint went into operation in 1870, with no production from 1886 to 1888, and ceased operations in 1893. Abe Curry who founded Carson City (named it after his idol, Kit Carson) was the first mint superintendent.

Quick Easter Baskets

Children five to fifty will love these little baskets. They're quick and easy to make so why not make them to remember those in a hospital or a home?

SPORTSTERS

What little man wouldn't enjoy these joyriders? Use eight sections from an egg carton, cutting the cover to fit. Cover with gay paper. Then cut around seat area and fold to inside for matching "upholstery." Add flashy foil fenders and trim, and glue on a piece of plastic for the windshield. And don't forget the license plate! Add a couple of decorated "eggheads."

MILK CARTON BUNNY

Here's another quickie made from scrap that's easy to collect in quantity — peaked milk cartons. Staple the peaked end shut; then remove one side. Paint the carton with a rubber base paint. When dry, staple ears in place, glue on paper features and whiskers, and paint legs along sides. A cotton tail adds the finishing touch.

EASTER BONNET BASKET

Here's a pretty for the little ladies on your list. All you'll need are a cottage cheese carton, colored paper, paper doily and some ribbon. Cover the carton with colored paper and glue to a circle of paper of the same color. Trim the brim with cutouts from the paper doily. Finally, add a bow and band of ribbon to the crown.

Do you have a lot of empty egg cartons? Don't throw them away! Send for cute ideas galore in book number 220, "Fun with Egg Cartons." To get your copy, send 50¢, along with your name and address to: Scrap Craft Fun, in care of this newspaper. Be sure to include book number and title.

THE ACES

ON BRIDGE

by IRA G. CORN JR.
TEAM CAPTAIN

Dear Mr. Corn:

Please settle a question for me. I have asked others; but every answer I get is different.

What is the proper procedure when one player is left with only one card to play, while the others still have two?

The last time this came up, our game turned out to be better than a Cassius Clay fight. Our game is never going to be the same until this is settled.

Wednesday Bridge Club, Seattle.

Answer. Your question is a common one, and many players find it perplexing. The problem is covered by the Laws of Contract Bridge, 1963 (Part III, page 11).

In general, every player is responsible for starting the deal with all 13 of his cards. If he is careless, then he may be subject to a penalty.

Specifically, when a player is short a card, whether the missing card was accidentally played to an earlier trick, dropped on the floor, or mixed in with the other deck, it is returned to the proper hand.

If the player revoked because of the absence of the missing card, the revoke penalty must be paid. If the player lost one or more tricks because he did not get to use the card to best advantage, he is out of luck.

If the deck was defective, including any case in which due search for the missing card is unsuccessful, there must be a redeal.

Dear Mr. Corn:

When should honors be declared at rubber bridge?

Big Holder, Castroville, Texas.

Answer. Honors should be declared at the conclusion of play. Declarer may declare them earlier if he wishes; however, he is under no obligation to do so. A defender should not declare honors until play is concluded, since his partner is not entitled to the information during the play.

The laws do not specify any time limits on claims, and procedure should be in accordance with local agreements.

Dear Mr. Corn:

I lost a recent duplicate game because of my result on this hand.

My partner (South) held:

♠ KJ3-
♥ A J 5 7 2
♦ 9 4 3
♣ 4 2

The bidding went:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What should South have bid?

Need An Opinion, Elmwood City, Pa.

Answer. Finding the correct bid after an original pass often requires a compromise.

I do not agree with South's response of two hearts. Since South had passed originally and since two hearts was not a forcing bid, I would bid either two or three spades (an overbid) depending upon mood, system and partner.

As the bidding took place, I would lose no time in bidding four spades over three clubs.

Greenhouse 'Saves' Spring For Clintonville Woman

BY MILDRED LAIB
Post-Crescent Correspondent

CLINTONVILLE — It snows outside although the calendar indicates spring, but in the Louis Krueckenberg home at 81 Ninth St. African violets and other plants bloom, the snow is forgotten and it seems like spring.

Mrs. Krueckenberg "likes plants" and they appear to respond to her care of them. Ten years ago the Krueckenbergs installed a 9- by 12-foot greenhouse on the south side of their residence, off an enclosed porch, so she could enjoy the hobby throughout the year.

Heated Greenhouse
The greenhouse is heated and during the winter months, it is covered with a sheet of builder's plastic. In the fall, Mrs. Krueckenberg brings in the plants from outdoors, and cuttings from geraniums, coleus and impatiens plants to name a few. In the spring, she starts such things as tomatoes and marigolds in the greenhouse.

Time seems to pass quickly for her as she works with the plants in the greenhouse, according to Mrs. Krueckenberg. She is there daily, and always is fascinated to see blossoms appear and to control the growth of some of the plants.

A good example of the fast growth is a Passion Plant in a large container, which has forced its way through the earth below the greenhouse and is climbing the opposite side, as well as up on the wall and on the ceiling.

Plant Trades
The greatest fun with this type of a hobby is trading plants to get a variety of things growing, says Mrs. Krueckenberg. Many people are remembered with gifts of plants and flowers grown by Mrs. Krueckenberg.

Her hobby not only provides pleasure for herself but the neighbors who enjoy the view both of the greenhouse and a large flower garden outdoors in the summer. In place of a fence along their property, the Krueckenbergs have 10 geranium and petunia-filled planters or urns atop a row of posts.

Krueckenberg cares for the vegetable garden and especially likes to grow tomatoes and cucumbers. He is looking forward this year to the growing of something new — "lemon cucumbers" which are the color and size of a lemon.

Plants and flowers are not confined to the greenhouse but meet the eye in pretty colors and variety throughout the house. African violets cover the top of a desk placed in front of the windows in the living room. The individual pots are placed in larger containers and watered from the bottom.

Mrs. Krueckenberg says she thinks a common mistake is watering plants too much. She uses unsoftened water from a pitcher which contains egg shells. By "feeding" the house plants the enriched water she avoids having to use commercial plant foods.

Plants Bud
Two shrimp plants, which grow wild in California, are budding right now. There are four kinds of ivy that keep growing all the time and two Bougainvillea plants growing inside from cuttings. Varieties of cactus are grown, and even a Christmas poinsettia still is in bloom.

Soon the outdoor planting will begin and then the reward of several months of colorful blossoms and plants.

Mowers Pose Danger

Never unclog your power mower while it is running. A hand is no competition for a whirling blade.

Advertisements for Seed Should Undergo Scrutiny

Spring brings birds to their nests and home gardeners to their yards. Gaily colored catalogues offer vast arrays of seeds to gardeners planning planting.

But not all claims of seed merchandisers may be true. Garden enthusiasts looking for the best buys should carefully study advertising claims. The seed branch of the federal Consumer and Marketing Service enforces the Federal Seed Act. The agency is a branch of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Advertising Claims
Home gardeners and farmers should be suspicious of advertising which seems exaggerated or unrealistic, according to the agency. Information on seeds is available through University of Wisconsin extension offices or state experiment stations.

False and misleading advertising of seeds in interstate commerce or through the United States mail is a violation of the Federal Seed Act. The act applies to pictorial, written or broadcast advertisements.

Sometimes false or misleading information is overt and sometimes subtle. Advertising calling seed hybrid is an overt violation if it does not meet the definition of hybrid seed specified by the federal act.

Illegal Advertisements
Representing seed as a pure variety when it is a mixture of varieties also is illegal.

A firm cannot claim its seed is "certified," unless it has been certified by a state certification agency. Names of kinds and varieties of seed, referred to in an advertisement, must conform to official names recognized under the federal law.

Misleading claims are the most frequent violations, according to the agency.

It is illegal to use descriptive terms with kind or variety names creating the impression the descriptive terms are part of the kind or variety name. For instance, it is illegal to use the descriptive term, "fancy," before the kind name, "red top," so that it creates the impression "fancy red top."

Common Violation

Another frequent violation is advertising seed under a brand name, in a manner which creates the impression that the brand name is a variety name. Changing the name of a variety and claiming that it is new and different also is a violation of the law.

Some cases of false advertising are brought to the attention of the agency by state seed officials. Specialists within the branch also review advertising claims in seed journals and catalogs.

Truth to Claims
The validity of suspicious claims on such factors as yield and insect and disease resistance is determined by referring to results of state experiment station tests.

When advertising claims are found to be false or misleading the seed branch ordinarily writes a warning letter to the firm responsible. Since most firms cooperate few are prosecuted in a court of law.

Prune Fruit Early to Get Quality Yield

Pruning woody fruit plants such as apples, cherries, plums, pears, grapes and raspberries is management practice affecting top production of quality fruit.

George Klingbeil, University of Wisconsin extension horticulturist, says properly pruned fruit plants provide conditions least suited for troublesome insects and disease pests.

This means smaller amounts of pesticides and probably fewer applications to get adequate pest control.

Directions and diagrams illustrating proper techniques for pruning fruit plants have been prepared by university horticulturists and are available from county extension offices.

Pruning usually is a late winter or early spring task. For best results, Klingbeil says pruning should be done annually before growth begins in spring. The primary objective is to improve the plant and its ability to produce fruit. However, there are some other benefits.

Winter pruning of apples, pears, and raspberries can, in some locations, provide food for rabbits. Fresh pruning can be collected and taken to the edge of the planting or other suitable feeding locations.

'Snow White' Mock Orange Floral Fountain

A catalogue reaching us offers Snow White, a new mock orange that makes a natural floral fountain or may be shaped by pruning. The double flowers are sweet scented, two inches across, generally blooming from May to June.

Also recent—from Kelly Bros.—are Pink Japanese Snowball, a hybrid bush also hardy in all locations, five and one-half feet tall; and Improved Red Spirea, 27 inches tall, blooming from June to frost and good for cutting.

An unusual ground cover is Dragon's Blood sedum, providing color all season, good for borders and edgings, in sun and shade.

Hardy Laurel Otto Luyken, Gabel's Pioneer Azalea and a colorful Korean Lilac are other newcomers.

General Electric's new rechargeable Elec-Trak® garden tractor.

QUIET. Now you can mow anytime day or night. Why? Your powerful, rugged Elec-Trak tractor easily handles tough lawn jobs without heat, noise, fumes or vibration.

RECHARGEABLE. Just plug it into any standard household outlet for a quick recharge and you're ready to go. Mow up to 3 acres—for about 5¢/acre—or haul heavy loads all day long on a single charge, with no extension cord. Plug it in when you're through and the battery is refueled at almost 20% per hour.

SAFER. It stops when you stop. A safety switch immediately shuts down mower blades and drive if you leave the tractor seat. Front mounted mowers are available with either side or safer rear discharge. All heavy duty attachments can be changed in seconds with no lifting because power lift is standard.

INSTANT START. Flip a switch and it goes. Whatever the weather. Elec-Trak tractor's tough, dependable power-pack is warranted for 5 years. Forget tune-ups, clutched belts and hazardous fuel.

Join the move to clean, quiet electric power. The whole family will find yard work fun with the Elec-Trak tractor and the full line of plug-in attachments... from a giant snowthrower to a lightweight chain saw.

Careful Maintenance Hikes Pool Pleasure

When warm weather approaches, pool owners cast longing looks at their home swimming pools.

Now is the time to take the necessary maintenance steps that will assure a pleasant, trouble-free summer of frolicking in clear, sparkling water.

After removing protective winter covers, and if pool was drained, sweep inside and surrounding areas clean of debris and dirt.

Check Cracks
Next inspect exposed surfaces to check for cracking of walls or floor, and to see if painting or refinishing is needed. Examine all valves, controls, pipes for leakage.

Dried packings and gaskets may cause minor seepages that will stop by themselves as they absorb water and expand. If not, tightening with a wrench or replacing packing will be necessary.

Seek Help
If any major leaks are observed, turn off water and call for professional help.

While pool is filling, check filtration equipment for operational readiness. Follow the manufacturer's recommendations for oiling and cleaning prior to putting the filter into operation, which can be done as soon as water reaches the filter intake pipe.

Most modern filters are of the diatomite type and proper pre-coating, about 1-16th" thick, is accomplished by circulating a mixture of diatomite and water into the filter.

If there is a body feed apparatus, diatomite is placed into. Then, small amounts are automatically added during the filtration cycle, keeping slimes and other dirt from clogging the precoat layer.

At first, though water will be perfectly fit for drinking, it will appear cloudy and uninviting. Because of this, the first few cycles can be shorter than usual. As filtration progresses, the improvement in clarity will be startling.

Add Chemicals
Chlorination of the water and addition of other chemicals or algicides should be done before the pool is used. Complete filtration of pool contents may take up to 18 to 24 hours.

Most pool filters require cleaning at three to 10 day intervals — depending on use, temperature desired and efficiency of chlorination and pH control.

Frequent automatic or hand skimming, plus vacuuming, can ease filter loads. Control of algae by chemical treatment will cut operating expenses.

Perfumes Trick Honey Bees?

In the future gardeners may add perfume to their plants. Their purpose, however, will not be to delight the senses but to lure forager honey bees.

Plants sprayed with a scented sucrose solution may attract the bees and boost the chances of pollination giving sprayed plant an edge over odorless competitors.

Tests are incomplete but a United States Department of Agriculture researcher at Tucson, Ariz., reported he can steer bees to plants with scent.

The research was completed by Gordon D. Waller, an Agricultural Research Service entomologist, at the Honey Bee Research Laboratory at Tucson.

He sprayed Moapa alfalfa plots with combinations of citral, geraniol and anise at concentrations of one per cent to 1,000 parts water.

Separately, all three scents failed to draw bees unless used with sucrose. Combinations of sucrose and two or more scents drew top results.

Waller still has not determined the basis for attraction nor extent to which visitations of bees actually improves pollination and yields of specific crops.

"We want to test your aptitude for accounting"

The International Accountants Society, Inc., invites you to take this free test which tells if you can work with numbers—as accountants do. It could start you on the road to a prestige career in one of the most exciting areas of today's business world.

by Donald R. Morrison

Donald R. Morrison, CPA, is the President of the International Accountants Society, Inc. His experience covers both public and private accounting and includes government work as a comptroller for the U.S. Army. He has also taught accounting subjects at Ohio Wesleyan University.

HERE IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY to discover whether you have aptitude in one of the world's best-paid professions—accounting. All you need do is take our free Accounting Aptitude Test at home, in your spare time. We'll tell you if you can be trained in this rewarding field.

No reputable school can promise success, but thousands of people who have taken this test, and developed their skill through our training, have gone on to successful careers as accountants, office managers, auditors, controllers and business executives. It makes no difference what kind of job you have now. If you have a high school diploma or equivalent—if you like working with figures—then one of the world's best-paid careers may be open to you. And you can go as high in the business world as your ability will take you. Accounting training opens the door to every business—to executive positions right up to top management—because accounting is such a vital part of every business today.

Accountants wooed and rewarded

The ever-growing needs of American industry have created an almost constant demand for more trained accountants. Today, and for years to come, accounting offers a real incentive for ambitious men and women who are in humdrum, dead-end jobs. It may offer you the opportunity to say goodbye forever to scrapping salaries. And once you learn accounting you'll have a valuable skill no one can take away from you for the rest of your life. In good times or bad, accountants are almost always in demand.

How you learn the skills of accounting

Since 1903, the International Accountants Society, Inc., has trained many thousands of men and women to become accountants. It is the largest and oldest home-study school devoted exclusively to the teaching of accounting and allied subjects.

One key to the school's success is its practical technique of teaching: you learn by doing. You do the kind of things accountants do—face similar problems—just as though you were learning on the job. This is not only a more effective way to learn, it is highly enjoyable. You see your skills grow, lesson by lesson. And every step of the way, you are guided through the mail by faculty members who are all Certified Public Accountants.

Here's what students say

This personalized training has helped men and women all over the country find prestige jobs in accounting. Here is what some of them say:

"In the last five years my earnings have more than doubled as a result of my studies with I.A.S."—Mrs. Louise J. Moore, Olympia, Washington.

"My first IAS assignment made accounting even more interesting than I could ever imagine it would be. Between the time I started your course and completed it, I received raises totaling $65.00 weekly."—Arthur E. Rose, Fairfield, New Jersey.

"My thanks to International Accountants Society which I sincerely believe is in a very large part responsible for the success I have enjoyed in the business world. . . . I feel that my small investment of time and money in the IAS course could increase my potential lifetime earnings by a very substantial amount."—John J. Keepers, Wau-pun, Wisconsin.

"Your home study course has enabled me to obtain my present position, which has resulted in a very substantial increase in earnings."—Thomas E. Cook, Phoenix, Arizona.

Major firms use our training

Companies like National Cash Register, General Mills, Standard Brands, Campbell's Soup, Westinghouse and many others use the International Accountants Society to train their own employees in accounting procedures. Many former students hold top positions with leading corporations and the government.

How I.A.S. training in accounting has helped men and women everywhere find success

"After accounting course I'm proven its value by giving me a 50% increase in wages. . . . IAS has helped me find challenges and satisfaction which money could not buy."—Bill Hanson, Virroqua, Wisconsin.

"I was interviewed for a job and when I showed the company my I.A.S. Diploma, I was hired on the spot. Incidentally, my salary is just great!"—Joann Levens, Tampa, Florida.

"IAS 'baited' me out of a problem 19 years ago. Today I'm President of one company and officer in four other industrial corporations."—Robert G. Chapman, Whittier, California.

"I cannot express strongly enough my satisfaction with IAS training and my gratitude for the help it has given me. I am now Chief Accountant of a large insurance company."—Mrs. C. M. Buckles, Seattle, Wash.

Approval Sought For Bonding Hike Under ORAP Plan

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — Increased local interest and availability of more federal money have prompted the Department of Natural Resources to increase its request for the sale of bonds to help finance municipal and regional pollution abatement facilities.

Lester Voigt, secretary of the department, told the legislature's Joint Finance Committee Friday that the department would like permission to float $60 million in bonds under the ORAP-200 program rather than the $32.5 million formally requested in the department's budget.

Up to $144 million in bonds may be sold for pollution abatement facilities under provisions of the Outdoor Recreation Act, Program-200 enacted by the last session of the legislature, after a statewide referendum. The remaining funds are to be used for acquisition and development of recreation land.

208 Applications
Voigt told the committee that expansion of the pollution abatement funds "is needed much more rapidly than anticipated." He said that department has 208 applications from local units of government on hand for the funds. The applications represent waste treatment projects throughout the state that would cost about $198 million. The state's share would be $50 million, the local share the same, and the federal support either 50 per cent for single community projects or 55 per cent for regional projects.

In the budget, prepared some time ago, the Department of Natural Resources had requested less money for pollution abatement projects than the $33.4 million used during the 1969-1971 biennium. The increased local interest, and the greater availability of federal funds for the federal portion of the projects prompted the DNR to ask for a larger release of funds.

In contrast to the educational agencies that appeared before the joint finance group earlier in the week, the DNR did not take issue with the governor's changes in their departmental requests. Voigt in fact merely presented the governor's own recommendation for use of ORAP funds for recreation areas, despite the changes in priority from those presented by the department.

Recreation Ratio
The department had requested that ORAP funds for recreation areas be allocated at a ratio of 55 per cent for land acquisition and 45 per cent for land development, totaling $14.8 million.

Gov. Patrick J. Lucey, however, proposed that the same amount of money be divided with $9.6 million or 65 per cent for land acquisition and $5 million or 33 per cent for development.

In the 1969 session of the legislature the department had recommended a split of recreation money on a formula similar to that proposed for the new budget, but the legislature established a revised policy of only 30 per cent for acquisition and 70 per cent for development of parklands in order to provide immediately usable facilities for constituents. The department had favored land purchasing in order to acquire land as soon as possible before prices increased, making the bonding money ultimately spread over a smaller area.

Price Too High?
Rep. Ernest Korpela, D-Washburn, accused the department of spending too much for the land it has purchased under the ORAP program particularly in the Ashland-Bayfield area he represents. Korpela said he knew of a number of persons who acquired land for one price and within a short time sold it at double or triple the price to the state for recreation areas.

Voigt told Korpela he would review land purchase details with him, but advised the committee that appraisals are made only after appraisals are made. He said that the department has discontinued the practice of publishing priorities for land acquisition under the ORAP program because it had been discovered that speculators beat the department to the land and then attempted to make significant profits over short periods by sale of the land to the DNR.

"People criticize us for being too harsh and for being too lenient. We've only been going for two years and we expect to get more expertise," Voigt said in reference to charges that land was bought at inflated prices.

Oshkosh Man On Probation For Battery

OSHKOSH — A 34-year-old man was placed on probation for a year to the director of Alcoholism Services after he pleaded no contest to a battery charge.

Richard Farr, 34, formerly of route 2, Hilbert, appeared in Circuit Court Branch 2 Friday with his court-appointed attorney Gaylord Loehning, Edmund Loehning told Judge Neenah P. Arpin that Farr did not remember being arrested or jailed the night of Feb. 25, and Loehning said he did not think Farr intended to injure one of the arresting officers.

Farr, who had been arrested for driving while intoxicated, kicked a Menasha police captain in the face and head while he was being transported from the Menasha police department to the Winnebago County jail.

An Oshkosh man was sentenced to three years in the Wisconsin State Prison at Green Bay, Friday, after being convicted of burglarizing an Oshkosh service station Jan. 3.

John E. Klinker, 33, Bay St., had been found guilty by a 12-member jury in Circuit Court Branch 1 of burglarizing Hoffman's East Side Service Station, 208 Bowen St.

Oshkosh police men found Klinker hiding in the building when they investigated the break-in.

Circuit Judge William E. Crane said the sentence is to run concurrent with any sentence imposed by Circuit Court Branch 2.

Zion Lutheran at Embarrass Plans New, Larger Church

EMBARRASS — Construction of a new church for the Zion Lutheran Congregation will begin as soon as the weather permits this spring, according to Henry Gipp, chairman of the building committee.

The Kucksdorf Construction Co., Leopolis, has been awarded the general contract. Douglas H. Stadelmann, Menomonee Falls, Wis., is the architect. The total cost of the project will be approximately $100,000, Gipp stated.

The new church will be built east of the present building on the same church lot. Its dimensions are to be 40 feet by 96 feet. The present building, constructed in 1888, is 24 feet by 50 feet. The new church building will have frame construction and a split rock face. The new basement facilities will include a kitchen, rest rooms and at least 10 Sunday school rooms divided by folding walls.

A year ago the members decided at a church voters' meeting that something had to be done to provide suitable Sunday school facilities because the present ones were inadequate, and it was decided to go ahead with the building project.

In addition to Chairman Gipp, the other members of the building committee are Ervin Zimdars, Ralph Nystrom, Gordon Radtke and Grover Gehrt.

Lumber Group Elects Tigerton Man President

Robert Hendricks To Head Northern Hardwood and Pine

TIGERTON — Robert Hendricks, vice president and secretary of Tigerton Lumber Company was elected president of the Northern Hardwood and Pine Manufacturers' Association, Green Bay, at its recent 61st annual meeting.

Hendricks succeeds Jack Rajala, vice president, Rajala Mill Co., Bigfork Minn. Rajala will remain on the Board of Directors and the executive committee for one year.

The new president is a native of Tigerton and the third generation to be active in the lumber company founded in 1875 by his grandfather, John Schwanke.

Hendricks graduated from Marquette University with a bachelor of science degree in business administration.

He also is vice president and secretary of Tigerton Electric Company, vice president and secretary of Badger Lumber Company, vice president of Swanke Lumber Co., and director of the First National Bank, Tigerton.

He has been active in civic affairs, was village trustee for eight years, member of the Shawano County Social Services Committee, and the Tigerton Advancement Association; past zone chairman of the Lions Club and past director of Wisconsin Lions Club and past director of Wisconsin Lions Foundation.

The Tigerton Lumber Company has a new modern sawmill and a 45,000 acre industrial tree farm that assures a perpetual supply of half of its raw material on a sustained yield basis. This means that the company harvests only what grows per acre per year to assure continuous timber. The Northland Girl Scouts use the industrial forest for their annual campground.

Fire Destroys Car, but Driver Thrown Free

BLACK CREEK — A rural Seymour motorist was in satisfactory condition this morning at Appleton Memorial Hospital following a traffic accident early today in which fire destroyed his car.

Hospital authorities said that Floyd Kieffer, 30, route 1, Seymour, sustained cuts. X-Rays were being taken, they said.

Outagamie County police said Kieffer was thrown from his 1961 auto when it left County Trunk about two miles southeast of here. The car burst into flames after the accident, they said. Kieffer had been traveling north.

The Black Creek Fire Department, extinguished the fire. Kieffer was taken to the hospital by the Seymour rescue squad after the 2:30 a.m. accident.

Marion Places Three Girls On All State Honors Band

MARION — Three local high school students received participation in this excellent word this week that they had organization. The competition is held to play on the All State Honors Band this summer, are competing with students and two were chosen as alternates.

They are Bonnie Ashenbrenner and Marie Ashenbrenner, who were chosen to play in the clarinet section, and Carol Lorrigan in the trumpet section. Alternates include Kay Tuschauser, clarinet, and Mary Beth Beyer, flute.

These students auditioned in February and were notified this week. This is a program which is sponsored by the Wisconsin School of Music and involves only the top musicians throughout the state.

County Relief System Sought by Waupaca

City Council Votes for Change

WAUPACA — The City Council met in special session Friday and passed a resolution requesting the county board to establish a county system of general relief to be administered by the Waupaca County Department of Health and Social Services.

In addition, the council asked that the county bear all the expense of maintaining all eligible dependents in the county.

Aldermen asked that the city be permitted to change from a general relief program, which it has been administering, to a county system of relief.

The action was taken because the city's general relief program, which nearly has doubled in the past three months, now requires too much time for determining eligibility. (e.g. a settlement and constant verification.)

Funds May Be Gone
The city's $2,000 general relief budget may be gone by June City Clerk Harriett Ward told the council.

Ald. LaVern Hanke (5th) told the council that the general relief program in the city has been under study for several months because of the increasing number of requests. "We have no trained personnel, it is very time consuming, and it is impossible to keep up with the intricacies of relief legislation which are continually being changed."

"It is hard to argue for or against the change economically. Some years a municipality might be hit hard by a number of relief cases and other years there may be only a few. The county system provides a wider tax base and should be less burdensome financially," he said.

"There are now no guidelines to go by and too often a local administrator is faced with making arbitrary decisions as to how much relief an individual should be given. Having the program under one roof handled by trained personnel, as we are recommending, should eliminate many of these irregularities."

Approved Change
The council voted 6 to 1 to approve the change. Ald. Everlof Roloff (3rd) voted no. He explained he thought it would be too easy for a relief client to accept his check and refuse to work, according to Mrs. Dan work on any relief project. Ald. Diener, project chairman for Marlyn Looker abstained from the club. Co-chairman is Mrs.

voing. He said he wanted to study further what the impact of the county program would be on the taxpayer.

Other municipalities and towns, it was reported, may present similar requests to the Waupaca County Board when it meets on April 13. The City of Clintonville, and the towns of Farmington, Iola, Dayton and Waupaca have indicated an interest in making the change.

There are a number of factors involved, and these are expected to come up for discussion at the county board meeting.

Costs to County
Of primary concern will be the total cost of such a program to the county taxpayer. Will the county be willing to assume the cost of relief to eligible residents for such services, commodities or money as are reasonable and necessary under the individual circumstances to provide food, housing, clothing, fuel, light, water, medicine, medical, dental and surgical treatment (including hospital care) optometrical services, nursing, transportation, funeral expenses and wages for work relief?

What would the cost of administering the program be to the county level? Robert Payette, director of the Waupaca County Department of Social Services, was out of the city Friday and could not be reached for comment.

It is possible that there would have to be an addition to his staff of one or more persons to determine eligibility and follow-up on an inestimable increased caseload if the switch is made.

Some of the advantages under the county system would be: uniform guidelines for determining eligibility; one clearing house for all cases, and trained personnel to make investigation and administer the relief.

It is predicted that the Waupaca County Board will discuss the matter fully and possibly ask for more time to study the recommendation.

Bicycle Safety Month Planned at Clintonville

CLINTONVILLE — The Clintonville Junior Woman's Club is sponsoring bicycle safety month in April with several activities planned including the showing of safety films, poster contests, and a skill test with a bicycle safety check.

On Tuesday, a bicycle safety film will be shown at the schools at 9 a.m. in the junior high auditorium for the children of Rexford-Longfellow School; at 10 a.m., the Dellwood school; at 1 p.m., the St. Rose Catholic School, and at 1:45 p.m., the St. Martin Lutheran School. A representative of the Junior Woman's club and of the local police department will be present.

The poster contest will be open to students in grades one through six with $1, 2, and $3 prizes for each grade. The deadline for entries will be April 14. The purpose for the contest is to get the children to think about the safety rules of the road, according to Mrs. Dan work on any relief project. Ald. Diener, project chairman for Marlyn Looker abstained from the club. Co-chairman is Mrs.

Statistics show that 60 per cent of all bicycle accidents are due to the driver breaking a law," Mrs. Diener said. "We hope to make the bicycle safety month a yearly project, and to educate parents in assisting the youth in keeping their bikes in good repair."

The members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 664 will tape the bikes with reflector tape which lights up in the dark, during the time of the April 24 meeting.

Hotel Marson Has Three New Owners

CLINTONVILLE — A change in ownership of the Hotel Marson has been announced, effective as of April 1.

The new owners are Jack Waite, Charles Allard and Roger Vander Wyl. Waite is the owner of Pine Manor Nursing Home, Inc., Embarrass; Allard is the former owner and operator of the Rustic Resort at Clover Leaf Lakes, and Vander Wyl has a supper club at Combined Locks.

The Hotel Marson was purchased from the Walter A. Olen Estate.

According to the new owners, the hotel will be operated as in the past for apartments, transient rooms, dining rooms and cocktail bar.

Library Week Plans Announced

MANAWA — The student librarians of Little Wolf High School will participate in National Library Week April 18-24 by displaying streamers and posters, distributing book cards and displaying new paperbacks.

The student librarians are Linda Brasch, Sandy Cornelius, Cathy Heimbruch, Karen Janke, Kay Oestreich, Judy Otto, Kathie Rohde, Debbie Schultz, Sue Schultz, Vicki Schultz, Jeff Weasner, Vicki Zircel, Linda Wollenberg, Becky Rosenau, Renee Stevens and Sherry Walker.

Mrs. Charles Hoffman is librarian.

Briefs Requested in Waupaca Theft Case

WAUPACA — Theodore J. Miller, 43, of 106 Granite St., appeared in county court branch 2, Thursday, on counts of burglary and receiving stolen property in connection with the theft of a metal safe from the home of Louis Timm, 110 North State St., Waupaca, March 9.

In this preliminary hearing Judge Nathan Wiese asked Miller's attorney Roger Clark, Appleton, and Dist. Atty. Gerald K. Anderson to submit briefs on the case. When they are submitted, Miller will be bound over to county court branch 1 or circuit court.

Miller is presently in the Waupaca County Jail, unable to provide bond in the amount of $30,000 set by Wiese on March 24, when Miller appeared with counsel for his arraignment.

Thursday Wiese reduced the bail bond on the two counts of burglary and receiving stolen property to $10,000.

Miller faces four counts of concealing stolen property and bail bond was set at $1,000 for each county. The bail bond was reduced with the stipulation that Miller not contact 10 parties, five of them now being held in the county jail awaiting sentencing by Wiese, when presentence investigations are complete.

Lucey to Propose River Pollution Watch

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — Automatic monitoring of wastes in the Fox and Wisconsin rivers is high on the priority list of programs the Department of Natural Resources has proposed for funding under a special environmental package to be introduced to the legislature by Gov. Patrick J. Lucey.

In the face of the governor's proposal that $3.1 million be cut from the DNR budget requests for environmental protection programs and that a similar amount would be included in the overall budget after the governor makes specific recommendations of his own, the department has submitted a list of programs it suggests be included in the governor's proposal.

High on the priority list of the program presented by Lester Voigt, secretary of the Department of Natural Resources to the joint finance committee Friday was $763,400 for financing a mobile laboratory and industrial surveillance team for conducting automatic water quality tests of the two waterways and other state rivers and streams.

Paper Industry
Voigt told the committee that the program would concentrate on areas where the pulp and paper industry is strong. In the past Voigt told the committee, surveys of industrial pollution in the paper industry involved cooperation from the industry and the department had to rely heavily on the goodwill of the plants.

The automated monitoring equipment would be computerized and information would be fed by telephone wire to Madison where the information could be collated in a matter of hours.

The manual collection of information takes days, weeks and months to compile.

The money also would be used to develop a team of inspectors who would visit industrial plants unannounced.

The surprise check plan was explained after Rep. Anthony Earl, D-Wausau, asked representatives of the DNR if unannounced visits would not produce more reliable data on river pollution.

The Marathon County assemblyman said he frequently receives anonymous phone calls, apparently from employees of Wisconsin River paper companies, in which the callers report that the companies that normally bypass effluent into the river are turning on pollution abatement equipment in preparation for announced visits from DNR officials.

Voigt also told the finance committee that his department has proposed funds for shoreland management, surveys and standards programs an increase in the air pollution control program, solid waste disposal efforts and added support for reorganized district offices as part of the items the governor should consider in his environmental package.

Lucey, who has appointed a task force on environmental protection is expected to present an environmental package, including legislation and a budget for special funding to the legislature in mid-April. The content of his proposal has not yet been revealed. But, Rep. Lewis Mittness, D-Janesville, told the committee that he believes one legislative proposal the governor will make will be a recommendation that increased emphasis be placed on waste recycling.

Is Motherhood Outmoded?

There are a few concepts, such as the flag, motherhood and God, generally considered too sacred to criticize. But motherhood is now coming in for some hard knocks.

Part of the reason may be the concern over the population explosion by advocates of zero population programs. Part may stem from the Women's Liberation movement. Some of it, too, may come from the fact that household appliances and new methods of food preparation mean that keeping house need not necessarily be a full-time job.

But some of the statements from those who say motherhood is changing are not likely to be heartily received by everyone.

Dr. Beverly Mead, chairman of the Psychiatric Department at the Creighton School of Medicine, says that, "it is dreadful for a woman to spend her life, first as someone's daughter, then as somebody's wife, and finally as somebody's mother." The whole business of emphasis upon motherhood Dr. Mead believes developed so that women would adapt to an inevitable biological fate. Conditions are changing, Professor Mead conceded, "but we are still dragging along the chains of inappropriate concepts such as the beauty and sacredness of motherhood. Twenty years ago a mother's biggest job was to create a secure and loving home — a well lined nest — for her offspring. That's still necessary and desirable, but I want to emphasize that it's no longer enough to do just that. A fulfilled woman can no longer make a career of being a mother."

All of this may be very true. Besides there are women who are simply not cut out to be mothers, either because of physical or psychological handicaps. They may well find fulfillment in another field.

But there are others who simply like it and for whom being a full time mother is not just an escape from what some people consider to be more important projects. And anyone who has been one in the last couple of decades knows that the dillion of activities for children have to some extent at least replaced the household chores. Maybe there are too many such activities and they certainly break into the family schedules but to pretend they do not exist and often mean a full time job for mom is to ignore reality.

Besides there's the matter of being a wife as well.

Hitch-Hiking Is Legal

The question of the legality of hitch-hiking has been in the news recently, so as a public service The Post-Crescent quotes the Wisconsin statute on the subject:

"No person shall be on a roadway for the purpose of soliciting a ride from the operator of any vehicle other than a public passenger vehicle."

Thus the act of hitch-hiking is not against the law. It is a question of where a hitch-hiker stands to solicit a ride.

The statutes further define roadway as meaning "that portion of a highway between the regularly established curb lines or that portion which is improved, designed or ordinarily used for vehicular traffic, excluding the berm or shoulder."

Thus it is legal for a hitch-hiker to solicit a ride if he stands back of the curb line or on the shoulder of a highway.

A New Everest Expedition

Another expedition is setting out, this time an international one, on a mission that seems foolhardy, almost ridiculous, and yet thrilling enough to catch the attention of much of the world.

Mount Everest was finally conquered in 1953 by Edmund Hillary and Tensing Norkay. Since then probably four or five other teams have made it to the top. The number is somewhat in doubt because China claims its team reached the summit in 1960 but this is under dispute. The new group consists of a 13 nation, 29 man and one woman team and they plan to take a different and more difficult route. Already a base camp has been established at about 17,000 feet. But those last 12,000 feet are the most difficult — and the new planned route includes 2,600 feet of almost vertical rock.

The only woman on the team is Yvette Vaucher from Switzerland whose husband, a mathematics teacher, is also on the trip. One American, John Evans, may be the leader over the dangerous face climbing part of the trip but his wife plans to remain at the base camp.

This type of adventure continues to demonstrate the individual's effort to conquer some aspect of the world's natural dangers, even in an electronic age. Thus we have had Kon Ra II, the papyrus boat which crossed the Atlantic. There was the Englishman who rowed across, something which didn't even occur to Columbus, although it may have to earlier men who came to this side of the Atlantic. And there was a young man in his teens who sailed, mostly alone, in a small boat around the world. We have had and continue to have Arctic and Antarctic explorers, those who go by dog team or under the ice in submarines. There are ski expeditions by helicopter to remote areas although conditions at more accessible places are just as good. There is a new hotel going up in Nepal and the only way so far to get to it is by helicopter shuttle. And, although with a lesser degree of danger, there are long distance swimmers, the joggers and a myriad of other competitors who set conditions and trials for themselves and try to win.

Sometimes there is valuable scientific and historic information to be found in such exploits. We know now that a papyrus boat could have crossed the Atlantic centuries ago. We know that there may have been a West to East crossing of the Pacific as well as the other way around. And most of all we learn anew what man can do if his dedication and determination are strong enough.

We hope the Everett party makes it. One thing it could prove again is that representatives of different nations can cooperate when the stakes are high enough.

Extremism Rules Northern Ireland

The major threat to some sort of settlement in Ireland is the extremist, whether he happens to be a member of the outlawed Irish Republican Army which has been dormant for so long or a fanatical anti-Catholic.

Unless the extremists can be kept under control — and the senseless murder of three young British soldiers does not offer much hope unless there is widespread revulsion because of it — there is every chance that England will insist upon complete control in the six northern counties usually called Ulster. This would mean more British troops and antagonism in the north as well as the south. In fact, the British might find themselves battling irate citizens of the southern and largely Roman Catholic Republic of Ireland and members of the northern constabulary, virtually all Protestant. It would be a long time in such an event before the antagonisms died away.

Currently there are high level conferences going on in England on just what to do about the situation since the resignation of Prime Minister Chichester-Clark in Ulster. Even though his successor, Brian Faulkner, is also a moderate and his election at least indicated some sense among the members of Ulster's parliament, the change was upsetting. The frustration over the entire situation was indicated when Enoch Powell suggested that perhaps if citizens of the Republic of Ireland could be declared aliens in England the government would see to it that the IRA remained banned in action as well as word. The Irish now can enter England without any passport problem, can work there and even send most of what they make back home. The privilege is open to them even though the Republic more than twenty years ago declared itself not even a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations, much less a dominion.

The governmental situation in Ulster is also somewhat confusing. It is not actually a part of Britain but of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. But when the Republic declared itself completely free and independent, a new Ireland Act was passed declaring not only that "Northern Ireland remains part of His Majesty's dominions and of the United Kingdom," but that "in no event will Northern Ireland or any part thereof cease to be part of His Majesty's dominions and of the United Kingdom without the consent of the parliament of Northern Ireland." This would certainly rule out any federation between the two parts of Ireland, at least until tempers have cooled down considerably. Since they have remained high for something like 300 years when British and Scottish moved into the northern counties it's not likely that passions will disappear in a hurry.

Despite the discrimination and the fanatics, it is a ridiculous situation. It's a clear demonstration that when a country comes under the real influence of the extremists, there is bound to be serious trouble.

Fox River Cleanup Only an Idea; Needs Support of Basin Factions

The March 18 article states: "... officials reportedly are high on making it one of the projects because of local interest and an advanced locally developed management program." Checking with David Wagoner of the EPA (he asked we correct the wrong spelling Wagner), we found that he has received no detailed management proposal from anyone in Wisconsin. He said eventually he must receive a proposal which is comprehensive and brings together all information and all organizations affecting the Fox River basin before his office can go very far in determining which river in the U. S. will get the demonstration grant.

The Post-Crescent stated: "The Fox came under consideration last year when '... the Fox Valley Council of Governments wrote the agency.'" Mr. Wagoner reported that in addition to that letter, he had received letters from Senator Nelson and others asking the Fox River be chosen. The Northeastern Wisconsin Regional Planning Commission has also written in support of the Fox River project, forwarding to Mr. Wagoner a copy of its 267 page report, "Water Quality and Flow of Streams in Northeastern Wisconsin" which includes detailed information on a good portion of the Fox River basin.

The March 28 article says area educational technicians "... have been working with COG public works director, Lawrence Michaels, since last year in developing a procedure for the management project on the Fox." Dr. William Sloey of Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh, a member of Michaels' group says they have met once on this subject, recently.

A situation The Post-Crescent doesn't point out is that presently there are three important programs zeroing in on the Fox River Basin which are mutually complementing, yet presently unconnected:

1. Mr. Thomas Frangos, Environmental Protection Division of the Wisconsin State Department of Natural Resources reports that pollution abatement orders have been issued along the length of the Fox River.

2. Wisconsin State Representative Lewis T. Mitmess, chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee is contemplating a special legislative investigation of the pollution of the Fox River in response to a petition signed by over 600 Fox Valley residents.

3. The federal Environmental Protection Agency is considering the Fox River along with several others for a large grant to clean up the Fox as a national demonstration.

Also, the newspaper doesn't point out the urgent need for bringing together all the information and all the agencies concerned with the Fox River so that a strong, unified, comprehensive plan of action with universal state and regional support can be presented to the Environmental Protection Agency. If we can do this, without consideration of political prerogatives, we might get the federal money to restore the Fox River. If we can't, we may lose out.

The Wolf River and Lake Winnebago feed into the Fox. What good does it do to clean up the Fox River if we don't have its source water under control? Calumet, Fond du Lac, and Winnebago Counties all front on Lake Winnebago. The Wolf River runs through eight counties reaching north to Forest County. The Fox runs through Outagamie and Brown. Surely there is a role for these entities in a $100 million river basin clean-up! Surely the federal government wants to attack the entire problem, not just the part of the Fox River that flows through a few of the larger cities between Appleton and Green Bay!

This is a big project. It's going to take big thinking to secure it for our region. There is no room for pettiness or exclusionary thinking in the planning and organizing of the detailed management proposal which must be forthcoming from the state and region to the Environmental Protection Agency.

With investigative, complete, unbiased reporting the local area newspapers can bring out all the facts and their proper relationship on this important matter so that the most good can be done for the most people.

Woman Should Have Choice on Abortion

Editor, The Post-Crescent: I'm seeing and hearing so much in today's news about the abortion laws that I feel that I must write.

I'm an average housewife with two children and I doubt if I'd ever want an abortion, but I would like to know that I had a choice. I do not feel that anyone has the right to tell me to have a child that I do not want, or for some reason cannot have.

Who is to say if it is right or wrong? I feel that if your conscience says it's the best thing for you, then it is. No one has to live with your conscience but yourself.

Why can't the people that are speaking out so strongly against it understand that no one is stelling them they have to have an abortion because the law says they can, but at least it's there if they want it. Let the ones that do need an abortion have it and the ones that don't need it or want the law changed, leave their noses out of the people's lives that do.

Too many times it's the people that are against it the loudest, that secretly wish they could do the thing they're talking against. Some say "never!" outside, while inside, at the same time, they're thinking about which doctor, should the need arise, to call for their self.

Again, I may be only one person, but I say let the people that want it have it. The ones that don't, well no one's forcing them.

But at least we will have a choice.

Sex Segregation in Employment Ads Eliminated by P-C

The Post-Crescent this week initiated a change which we believe is an improvement in service in the employment classifications of our want ad columns.

Traditionally, advertising for employment was divided into three classifications, Help Wanted — Male; Help Wanted — Female; and Help Wanted — Male-Female.

We became convinced that these classifications no

BY JOHN TORINUS
Editor, The Post-Crescent

longer fit current conditions in the job market where women are seeking, obtaining and holding many employment positions which once were regarded as the exclusive jurisdiction of men.

In addition, the segregation of employment advertising by sex violated the spirit if not the letter of the law. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 added sex as a consideration in employment discrimination to the traditional considerations of age, race, creed, color, national origin or ancestry. Wisconsin statutes were amended to conform.

The courts have held that newspapers cannot be coerced by the government into becoming enforcers of the discrimination statutes, and that the responsibility for justifying a sex preference in employment advertising is up to the employer. And on the basis of these court decisions many newspapers have felt justified in continuing the practice of segregating such ads by sex.

But The Post-Crescent has decided to pioneer in Wisconsin in eliminating the sex headings in its employment advertising, although reserving to advertisers the privilege of specifying a sex preference in their individual ads if they wish to and feel justified in doing so.

In place of the former three classification headings, we are now using nine classification headings in employment advertising.

We believe this provides a better service to readers in seeking and locating job opportunities which interest them or for which they feel qualified. And since it is a convenience to readers, it is also a benefit to advertisers.

Now the only remaining problem is the job market itself, which has shrunk considerably in this area in recent months. And as a result the volume of employment advertising has also dwindled. But at least we'll be ready when the expected upturn in employment opportunities occurs, hopefully, later this year.

The contractor started digging Wednesday for the expansion and modernization of The Post-Crescent plant.

It was a happy day for all of us involved in production of the newspaper. The project has been in the planning stage for almost three years now and it was a great relief to proceed from planning to construction.

Construction work will take the better part of two years, since remodeling and renovation of the present building must necessarily be delayed until the new addition is completed and occupied. It will cause considerable inconvenience to all our employees, but we are all more than willing to put up with this for the advantages the new building and equipment will offer.

The Post-Crescent was extremely fortunate to acquire the services of John Miner to head up our Oshkosh news bureau. John was the last survivor of the editorial staff of The Paper, and became available when that operation shut down completely.

Prior to working for The Paper, John was an editorial staff employee of the Northwestern for almost 20 years so he is intimately familiar with the Oshkosh area and its news needs. Miner and veteran reporter Edith Bock give us a very strong staff in Oshkosh.

State Support Will Hurt Effectiveness of Church

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

We hear much these days about the drive to get financial aid from the state for parochial schools. This drive is largely made by the Catholic Church and many of its members. It could be considered part of the popular sport of getting at the public trough. To be sure expenses for supporting schools on all levels have been going higher and higher; the end is nowhere in sight. But is taxpayers' money the right answer for them?

I belong to a Lutheran Church of the Wisconsin Synod. Our congregation operates a new grade school. Our Synod opened more new schools in 1970 than in any year of its history. We are much in favor of parochial schools and are willing to work, work and sacrifice to maintain them. The rewards are great and long lasting. We don't want the taxpayers of the state to help support our schools.

Because we have parochial schools we are familiar with the financial burden and all other problems that go with them. We can sympathize fully with our Catholic friends but submit respectfully that getting state aid is the wrong solution to the problem.

One of the most interesting and puzzling aspects of the whole situation is the apparent lack of vision and perceptiveness on the part of the leaders of the Catholic Church. They want millions and millions of public money to support a school system which their own people are unwilling or unable to support. These leaders should realize that by accepting public funds the spiritual effectiveness of the church will decrease and will in time be destroyed. Is it worth the price?

at least for the "plum jobs," he admitted, but there is a national shortage. Needed are business administration and accounting majors for hospital controller and administrator positions. The need for laboratory and X-ray technicians continues.

Enough Teachers

Wisconsin appears to have struck a balance in terms of teacher supply and demand although it may not last long in view of the output.

Turzenski said a Department of Public Instruction survey last September discovered only 141 vacancies in the 51,000 public school teacher force. Indications were that the vacancies were in special education, guidance, mathematics, vocal music and remedial reading. There is a general shortage elsewhere of industrial arts teachers.

of application. There are materials available to help with home office calls and other details of how to apply.

Plans are under way to counsel all juniors about placement office services.

Turzenski and Stein view the 70s as a period of adjustment and change in a time of inflation and a major revision of national priorities.

Corporations face a profit squeeze, Turzenski said. For a better position, they will cut back on people, replacing them with machines if possible or just limp along.

AAA Upset By Cut in Drivers' Ed Supports Task Force Proposal for More State Funds

Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — The Wisconsin division of the American Automobile Association has formally expressed "disappointment" over the decisions of the Green Bay and Neenah school boards to discontinue drivers' education.

Teachers may face a particularly difficult market for a time, Turzenski continued.

Fewer Births

Births are down and the output of teachers in Wisconsin is at an all time high. Across the country as well as in the state, school budgets are being curtailed and federal funds for schools are reduced.

Maynard Schneider, public relations director of the Wisconsin AAA, said Friday that an article in the April issue of Wisconsin AAA Motor News, which he wrote on the state driver education program was prompted by the action of the two school boards.

"We hope this is not the beginning of a state-wide trend," Schneider said in an interview regarding the article that cites the decisions by Green Bay and Neenah. "If it is a matter of funding," he said, "then we should all be concerned about funding driver education."

Curriculums are being redesigned to operate with fewer teachers. The emphasis is on programs that can rely heavily on paraprofessionals, the teacher aides and helpers. There is a small move even toward private contracting of the whole teaching service.

Contracting by business corporations for teaching service, Turzenski pointed out, will require teachers, but they will face a fairly continuous rating of performance.

Schneider said the AAA has endorsed a recommendation by the governor's task force on highway safety that state support of driver education should be increased and that the increase should come from increased drivers' license fees. "The state has its own money problems and it is not likely money will come from the general fund," he said in explanation of the recommendation that the license fees be increased.

"Some school board members, feeling the financial punch and anxious to cut costs, are questioning — ill-advisedly, in the opinion of AAA — the value of this lifesaving course in the school curriculum," Schneider wrote in the article.

The AAA interest in restoration of drivers education in Green Bay and Neenah is not an impromptu thing, the public relations official said. He said that a representative of the statewide organization of motor vehicle owners had appeared before the Green Bay school board to encourage a restoration of the program.

Parents will find, Schneider predicted in his article, as the letters column in the newspaper has already demonstrated, "that quality driver education in the high school — at an average cost of $65 per pupil — was a real bargain," especially when they discover that their 16- and 17-year old children are unable to get a driver's license without a complete driver education course.

Scouts performed a similar service at the museum last spring.

Wesley L. Foshay of Oshkosh, a member of the National Railroad Museum's board of directors, said the museum will be open as of May 1 to school tour groups and do the general public beginning May 30.

you don't like church, you don't go."

Two other men, one 28 and the other in his mid-30's, agreed. The younger man, mustachioed and wearing flared pants, said he recently moved here from Milwaukee.

Not "Not Objectionable"

"I have seen some of the entertainment and I don't think it is objectionable. It is ridiculous for some group in society to try to force their opinions on someone else by outlawing this type of entertainment. Society is better off if people have free expression and canable. My friend isn't married, exercise their opinions, as long as it doesn't endanger the rights of others."

"You can't see into the bars from the street," he noted. The man in his mid-30's, more conservative in dress, said: "No, it is twisting anyone's arm to go into the places. I don't think any regulations on this type of thing are needed."

He contended that half of those who are complaining about it didn't know what was going on before all the publicity. "Nobody is trying to get a petition against the church. The church should keep its nose out."

People know what they want and want to do, and what they don't want.

A housewife in her mid-30's said, "It doesn't bother me. My husband and I go to bars with nude entertainers occasionally."

"If people don't want to see it, then they shouldn't frequent those places. I find nothing better off if people have free expression and canable. My friend isn't married, exercise their opinions, as long as it doesn't endanger the rights of others."

The friend said she has not gone to any of the bars with nude entertainers, "but I actually haven't even thought about it. A 53-year-old man said he doesn't think really doesn't have an opinion, any regulations on this type of thing are needed."

He contended that half of

I don't follow it," he said. A 25-year-old man, a public servant, agreed with the majority that it should be a person's prerogative to subject himself to a certain type of entertainment.

Tax Urged But the young father said there should be an admission fee so people would have to pay a couple of bucks to get in. If they're willing to pay, let them."

He feels there should be a license for having nude entertainers, and a tax should be charged commensurate with the cover charge.

"I think it should be stated clearly in 10-inch block letters on the window or someplace that that's the type of entertainment offered. If you get your kicks out of it, OK, but I think it should be restricted to certain places and not free of charge."

Most people were somewhere between approval and disapproval. A young working mother in her early 20's, whose husband is a student said, "We have seen some of the strippers, but I haven't seen any of the nude dancers, and I really don't have any desire to, although I wouldn't prohibit anyone else from going if he wants to."

"My husband has gone to a few of the places which have nude entertainers, but I don't know his opinion," she said.

An Oshkosh State University co-ed in her early 20's took somewhat of a women's liberation viewpoint, saying, "I think nude dancers are another example of women being exploited. I would never go, even if I didn't have to pay to get in. It's the principle of the thing."

A male college student said he goes mainly to the bars near campus. "I haven't given it much thought," he said when asked his opinion about nude dancers at bars.

"I went to one of the bars with nude dancers and the girls were pretty ugly. If they want to make fools of themselves, let them go ahead," he said.

A woman prominent in an Oshkosh youth organization said she had mixed emotions on the subject.

"I don't approve. I think it is detrimental to the community. But it is a confusing question even to lawyers. How can I judge the legality of such entertainment or say if persons should be prosecuted?"

She said, "It appeals to our lower natures, and I don't like to see valuable time and money wasted on such things."

"If someone wants to do something, fine, just as long as it is not detrimental to the rest of society. I think nudity in bars and pornography are examples of wasted time and money in our society. "We still owe something to the kids," she said.

On the other hand there were a few persons who flatly opposed nudity in barroom entertainment.

A married, 23-year-old woman said, "I think it is bad and shouldn't be allowed. I think there should be an ordinance against it and it should be strictly enforced."

"It is against purely Christian morals. There is a petition against the nude entertainment at bars being circulated at our church and I hope everyone will sign it," she said.

A man in his 50's expressed the same belief. "I think there should be strong ordinances against this type of thing in all cities. It is against my morals," he said.

"It is too bad it is so hard to prosecute these cases," he said. The most untroubled response came from an attractive woman in her late 50's. "We recently moved to Ripon from Racine and I don't know too much about the entertainment in Oshkosh. But coming from a big city to a small community everything is so different. It is difficult to compare. I like it here."

Sunday Post-Crescent B 6

State Committees Plan Busy Week

MADISON (AP) — Revised school aid formulas, the merger of the two state university systems, and welfare reform head the agenda of legislative committee hearings next week.

The Joint Education Committee will hear testimony Tuesday on four bills to revise school aid formulas, adjust school aids and establish minimum school aids. The Senate Education Committee will consider a proposal to require all public school teachers to hold a bachelor's degree.

Education Panel The Senate education panel travels to Milwaukee Thursday for hearings on Gov. Patrick J. Lucey's proposal to merge the University of Wisconsin and Wisconsin State University systems. The hearings will be held on the UW-Milwaukee campus.

Other hearings will consider a Democratic proposal for the state to assume administration and financing of all welfare programs, including Aid to Families with Dependent Children. The proposal will be aired Wednesday before the Senate Health and Social Services Committee.

Hearings Listed Joint Finance Committee, 9 a.m. 113th south, the merger of the two university systems. Joint Education Committee, 2 p.m. 421 south, SB245, SB285, SB312 and AB335 on school aids, formulas and taxes.

Senate Education Committee, 10 a.m. 421 south, AB305 regarding degree requirements for teachers. Assembly State Affairs Committee, 9:30 a.m. 213 northwest, AB347, to make the birthdates of Martin Luther King and Malcolm X legal holidays, AB478, to ban "X" rated movies for outdoor theaters.

Wednesday

Senate Health and Social Services Committee 10 a.m. 421 south, SJR34, to amend the constitution to provide property tax relief for the elderly, SB309, school aid formulas, adjust school aids and establish minimum school aids. The Senate Education Committee will consider a proposal to require all public school teachers to hold a bachelor's degree.

Finance Group Joint Finance Committee, 9 a.m. 113 south, budgets of the Board on Government Operations, the state legislature and the State Building Commission.

Thursday Joint Finance Committee, 9 a.m. 113 south, revenue measures and distribution of shared taxes. Senate Education Committee, 10 a.m. UWM campus, SB213, to merge the two state university systems. Assembly Commerce and Consumer Affairs Committee, 1:30 p.m. 213 northwest, AB520 and AB527 to set standards for the weight of loaves of bread. Assembly Taxation Committee, 9:30 a.m. 424 northeast, AJR14, to amend the constitution to provide tax relief for the elderly.

Voters to Decide Local Questions at Kaukauna

KAUKAUNA — Voters in Tuesday's election will be faced with a variety of decisions, with ballots to be cast for county, city, school district and individual ward candidates, in addition to two local advisory referendum questions.

The county race will be between Alvin Woehler and James Long for executive while the race for city office is between incumbent Mrs. Mary Kavanaugh and Mrs. Lila Pitt, both seeking a one-year term as treasurer.

The school district race has five men, including two incumbents, seeking the three posts to be filled. Incumbents include Leo Driessen and Gordon Lamers. Seeking office for the first time are Ben Verbeten, Robert Grogan and Leo Coffey.

Aldermanic races are set in four of the five city wards, with Earl Luedtke running unopposed in the second. The first ward race has incumbent Robert Vondracek facing Clayton Blumreich, and in the third, incumbent George Simon is opposed by John Cronen. The fourth ward has incumbent Russel Dix running against Michael Swiontek, and in the fifth Robert LaPlante and Henry Drechsler are seeking the spot to be vacated by incumbent William Rogers.

The referendum questions involve reducing the size of the common council from 10 to five aldermen and increasing the term of mayor from two to four years.

Voting hours will be from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. with first and second ward voters casting ballots at Park School while voters in the third, fourth and fifth wards will vote at Nicolet School.

against the ravages of red leg disease.

Radio Scanner

A $6,000 radio scanner, in use in OSU laboratories for about a year now, automatically detects and graphs radioactivity of organic materials on extremely thin films or strips.

University researchers hope that radio scanning of the steroid hormones of turtles will tell them whether the reproductive organs of turtles function like those of humans.

At this point, it's pure research but from such studies scientists gain new insights into biological principles.

"Why turtles? We may miss something if we take only the human being into consideration," explain OSU faculty researchers Drs. John Klicka and I. Y. Mahmoud.

Biologists cannot know for sure until further work is done but the research on turtle steroid hormones, funded by Board of Regents grants, could possibly produce something like a more efficient birth control technique.

New Equipment

Other equipment recently added to the resources of the biology department:

—A $14,000 Cary spectrophotometer, used in various research projects to measure optical densities of scientific specimens.

—An eight-unit bank of machines—actually, a type of Geiger counter, currently used by about 10 students in a radiobiology course and in faculty research projects. The quantities of isotopes used in the university's radiation safety program require an Atomic Energy Commission license.

—A $5,000 calculator-analog computer, used by the department as a memory bank. It is able to "remember" 196 steps in research procedures.

—A cesium-137 irradiator, priced at $7,000, which allows the biology department to study the effects of gamma ray radiation upon reproduction and cell functions of small animals, plants and bacteria.

A radiobiology specialist at OSU is John D. Leith Jr., an associate professor of biology who holds the doctoral degree in medicine as well as the PhD.

Other major items of equipment used by biology students and faculty members range from a $6,000 dish washer, which cleans and sterilizes glassware for the entire department, to a room which may be the coldest place in Oshkosh.

Housed in the controlled environmental laboratories is a deep freeze chamber for storage of viruses, enzymes and other perishable specimens.

Temperature in the room is a constant 60 degrees below Fahrenheit!

Water Standards Protested

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lake Michigan "is now at the critical point of possible irreversible change where failure to take extraordinary steps will doom all hope of saving" it, said eight senators in a letter of protest against federal water quality standards.

The lawmakers, from states surrounding the lake, asked for tougher dumping regulations than those contained in the administration's proposed Refuse Act Permit Program.

They wrote Friday to William Ruckelshaus, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency; Robert Jordan, Army counsel; and Russell Train, chairman of the President's Council on Environmental Quality.

They said the administration's proposal does not go far enough. That proposal would tie permits to water

Valley Campus Head Of Athletics New Lake Director at Plamann

Thomas Alby, who is in his third year as athletic director of the Fox Valley Campus of University of Wisconsin-Green Bay, has been hired as lake director at Plamann Park for this summer.

Alby, 26, has had nine years' experience in water safety and life saving. He lives at 2018 S. Gladys St., Appleton.

His appointment was made Thursday night by the Outagamie County Board's public property and parks committee.

He will start on June 1 but screening of life guard applicants for the lake is expected to start soon.

This will be the third summer of operation for the manmade lake. Last year, nearly 60,000 swimmers used the facility.

stenographer record the meeting but were turned down.

None of the arguments had any effect on the final vote. "It's all cut and dried," protested one investor.

Opposition Defeated At All-Star Insurance

MILWAUKEE — Post Corporation voted Friday at the All-Star Insurance Corp. annual meeting for a proposal under which it could become sole owner of the Milwaukee-based insurance company, despite objections and threats of a lawsuit from minority stockholders.

The Appleton communications firm has been the majority stockholder in All-Star since 1969 and on Dec. 31 admitted holding 97.4 per cent of the insurer's stock.

V. I. Minahan, president of Post and of All-Star, cast those votes Friday in favor of a management proposal for a reverse stock split of 1 share for every 200 held and to eliminate fractional shares from the 4,500 authorized.

A group of eight bitter minority holders cast a total of 2,074 votes against the plan, under which they will receive $9.50 per share. Post Corporation voted 195,107 shares in favor of the proposal.

Legality Argued

Atty. Roger C. Minahan, All-Star secretary and acting chairman of the meeting, cited statutes and legal precedent to argue the legality of the move. The Minahans are cousins.

Under Wisconsin law, he said, a company can change its articles of incorporation as often and in any way it wants.

He added, "I'll tell you frankly that I could write a better law than this one."

Minahan said sole ownership by Post would save money in many ways. Further, he said, it would enable the company to grow faster and be more flexible because Post, the owner, could add money to the coffers easily.

The Milwaukee attorney said the stock's book value (the value of stated assets divided by shares) was $9.24. He also said that the $9.50 offered was 14.8 times the average earnings of 67 cents a share over the last two years, including the "unusually good year" of 1970. That's a better ratio than most insurance companies could get, he said.

Fight Was Futile

Attorney David Keyser, Shorewood, led the futile dissident fight and presented several proxies.

He threatened a lawsuit stemming from what he called the unfairness of the action and asked that no company funds be used in defense of a suit taken against the firm or the officers.

Roger Minahan ruled the motions out of order.

Afterward, Keyser said no specific legal action was planned.

"This has got to be resolved, not only for us but for all stockholders in the state," Alois

K. Voissem, another Milwaukee attorney, said.

Earlier, he had complained that the move by Post meant that stockholders were taking a double risk on their investments — one that the company was going to be successful and the other that if it were successful the majority stockholders could squeeze out the minority.

Stock Split Before

He said he had bought stock in All-Star for about $4 a share. It underwent a reverse split in 1968 of 1 share for every 6.17 held. That makes his investment about $25 a share now, he said.

Post gained control of All-Stars in 1969 for $9.50 a share. "Why don't you offer us a just price?" asked James Schutkin, a pharmacist.

Voissem said $30 would be more acceptable.

Attorney Christ Alexopoulos registered several objections, starting with acceptance of the reading of minutes from last year's meeting. He hadn't received notice of that meeting, he said.

Student-Produced TV Show Discusses CATV

OSHKOSH — An Oshkosh State University student-produced program on the impact and implications of cable television will be aired, probably some time this month, by KFIZ-TV, Channel 34, Fond du Lac.

It was conceived, produced and directed by students enrolled in Dr. Harris N. Liechti's television directing course, the school's advanced TV offering.

Liechti said the cable TV show features interviews with Oshkosh City Mgr. Gordon B. Jaeger on how a municipal administrator views cable TV; with Will Darch, KFIZ-TV station manager; and with John Breddesen, OSU broadcast engineer.

Discuss Potential

Breddesen discusses potentials of community antenna television (CATV), developed to upgrade and enlarge television services to remote communities.

The show was produced by Andrew Zeratsky and directed by James Bach. The same two students also collaborated on "Wings for Mankind," a recently aired documentary telecast on the history of flight.

Both shows, Liechti explained, are part of a current series of teleproductions entitled "New Ways," a look at the achievements and problems on contemporary man and his society.

Hopefully, he said, Channel 34 will be able to televise an OSU-produced program once a month at least through the remainder of the 1970-71 school year.

Aired by the Fond du Lac station last fall and winter were OSU's "Campus on the River," a documentary on the history and growth of the Oshkosh campus; "Titan Power," a university sports program; and a Christmas special.

Students Involved

Students involved in those shows included Jerry Burke, Mark Thompson, James Melcher, Marie Buchholz and Don Munn.

Liechti said half-hour videotaped programs are produced by students in the TV directing course at the rate of two a week.

Some of those not seen on Channel 34, he added, may be distributed to other campuses in the Wisconsin state university system or aired by Channel 38 of De Pere when that public television station becomes operational.

Devines Tackle Moving

BY ALICE K. HUCK, Post-Crescent Women's Editor

COLUMBIA, Mo. — There are many little problems that must be resolved before Mrs. Dan Devine and the children join the new Packer coach in Green Bay. One of the problems is Amy.

Amy Brown is the little girl next door, a school chum and best friend of 10-year-old Jill, the youngest of the Devine children. And Jill would like to make it a part of the offer-to-purchase that the new owners of the lovely brick Devine home "have a daughter who can be a friend for Amy."

Jill's concern for her friend, expressed so soon after we arrived for an interview with Mrs. Devine and the children, seemed to reflect the tone of the home. It didn't take long to discern that this is a family that, although excited and thrilled about Dad's new coaching job, wants to be sure that the University of Missouri team keeps on winning, that their Columbia home will be loved and well cared for, that their old friends will have new friends and that the next owners will be parents who "will keep their house as the center for the school car pool."

Focal points of activities around the home were obvious. There was a basketball hoop and plenty of keep-busy equipment for youngsters in the back yard. A stack of fabrics indicated that Mrs. Devine is a home-sewer, and later she admitted that for her, sewing is recreation — a pastime for which her six daughters always have been grateful.

Another batch of skirts and dresses "which need new hems" suggested that the mini skirt is still having its day, even though mother already has had requests for the long peasant look.

An attractive, well-organized kitchen, with a center work counter, was planned to be used, and since the dinner table, without guests but including grandmother, often has 10 plates, Mrs. Devine admits it's a good thing she likes to cook.

And she can, if the apple cake she tempted us with, is any indication. Since two women find it difficult to talk about food without talking about recipes, here it is. But Mrs. Devine usually doubles or triples the ingredients.

Apple Cake

3 cups, peeled, diced apples
1 1/2 cups flour
1 1/2 cups sugar
1/2 cup Mazola oil
2 eggs
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. soda
1/2 tsp. nutmeg
1/2 tsp. cinnamon

Beat eggs and oil, adding sugar and flour. Bake in 350 degree oven for 45 minutes or less, in square pan. Cut into squares before serving.

It would seem that a home economics major would have proved handy, but when Mrs. Devine met her husband at what is now the University of Minnesota —

Post-Crescent Photos BY FERN SMITH

With the brown brick, seven bedroom home in the background, two of the Devine girls play basketball after school with neighbor children. In the foreground is Jill, 10, and with her from left, are Amy Brown, 10-year-old neighbor; Lisa, 12, and Susan Maupin, 10, another neighbor. Jill is crossing her fingers that the new owners will have a 10-year-old girl.

Coffee and apple cake appeared promptly out of the beautifully appointed and well-organized kitchen at the Dan Devine home in Columbia, Mo., where Mrs. Devine obviously is "general manager and coach" for a household which demands 10 plates on the dinner table. The strip at right above, is part of Dan Devine's collection of football trophies.

Flowers on the coffee table of the spacious Devine living room are arranged by Mrs. Devine's mother, Mrs. John Brookhart, while 12-year-old Lisa rests after a strenuous basketball session in the yard.

How to Roll with the Punch

"A hazardous event can be conceived of as a threat, a loss or a challenge. But viewed as a challenge, it is more likely to be met with a mobilization of energy"

By T. K. Irwin

Why can certain people take a disastrous experience in stride while others flounder, panic or fall apart?

At one time or another we are all faced with an unexpected crisis. The family breadwinner loses his job. A lovelorn young woman is jilted. A mother is told her child has an incurable disease. An able-bodied man is suddenly crippled. How can we best cope with a situation in which the pros seem knocked out from under us?

I recall, some years ago, interviewing Sen. Edward M. Kennedy for a FAMILY WEEKLY article. After escaping death from a complex spinal fracture in a plane crash, he was strapped face down into an orthopedic frame at a hospital. There was a chance he would spend the rest of his life in a wheel chair. What sustained the Senator so that he could make a comeback?

"My brother Jack," he told me, "once wrote that 'each man must look into his soul.' I've seen a lot of people with more problems than I have, and I've learned to accept adversity as part of life. What helps me bear up is my family, friends and my spiritual faith. Joan and the children are like medicine for me."

Instinctively, people have their own, different devices to hold on until they can adjust. In my own experience, after the sudden death of my wife from a heart attack, I plunged into work, day and night. My son, then 17, tells me that whenever he felt low, he listened to country music or shot baskets in our back yard—instinctively turning to whatever he enjoyed. My son's girl friend, when faced with misfortune, loses herself in reading, becoming involved with fictional characters.

On the other hand, we all know individuals who succumb and turn their faces to the wall, unable to get their nerve back and snap out of a sense of doom. To learn why, let's look at our defense mechanisms. What happens to us when hard luck strikes?

A young mother is told she has given birth to a deformed baby or that her youngster has leukemia. After the stunning initial shock and confusion, she starts going from one doctor to another, hoping the verdict is false.

"At the moment of truth," says Dr. Louis Linn, a psychiatrist who deals with many cases of disability, "the pattern of coping depends on her personality structure. If she is emotionally mature, with a basic commitment to life, she often transcends the setback. This is the ideal. But many people are incapable of achieving a reaffirmation of life. They avoid reality."

A common reaction, whether it's to a disability, rejection by a loved one or another traumatic event, is retreat into oneself, sometimes into headaches, an ulcer or imaginary ailment. Some people respond by becoming angry and staging tantrums. Others, giving way to prolonged upset, expect friends to rescue them. Generally, there is loss of self-esteem; self-pity may set in.

Guilt feelings are not uncommon, as in a death in the family. The bereaved searches for evidence of failure to have done right by the lost one and accuses himself of negligence. Or feelings of hostility erupt, perhaps against a surgeon. With a divorce or job loss, hostility may be vented on others.

In contrast, reaction to adversity can be optimistic. Rolling with the punch, you hope for a cure or summon your resources to find a new mate or new career. A classic example was Franklin D. Roosevelt, who, after he was stricken with polio, made it the turning point of his life with his upwardly directed commitment to politics.

Other examples from politics include Richard Nixon and Sen. Charles Percy of Illinois. Nixon lost the Presidency in 1960 by relatively few votes, then suffered humiliating defeat in his race for Governor of California. As the world knows, he made a miraculous comeback and gained the White House. Percy received a devastating shock when his daughter was mysteriously murdered during his election campaign. He, too, bounced back. These men had something: they really knew their strength when they were tested.

Much, of course, depends on various factors. The young are more apt to snap out of a misfortune; the old are less flexible. Response is also affected by the severity and suddenness of the blow, whether you are hit where you are most vulnerable. To a violinist, for example, it makes a vast difference whether a leg or an arm is crippled.

"Your idea of the loss is the key," points out psychologist Alice Loomis, who is confined to a wheel chair. "Assess what you think you've lost. Determine if the setback is just a disappointment and not a loss of self-worth. How you meet it depends on how much you had at stake and your expectations in life."

In response to catastrophe, many people experience a sudden awakening of religious faith.

"Faith is the ultimate support, providing hope," says the Rev. Donald E. Smith, director of the American Foundation of Religion and Psychiatry. "Faith means to walk gaily into the darkness—and you need faith in yourself, in people and in God. Prayer helps put events in perspective, to give them meaning. It helps rebuild walls, maintain fences and strengthen the undergirding. And faith teaches us that this loss, whatever it may be, is not the final tragedy, does not diminish you as a person."

Everyone, even the irreligious, has some kind of faith. It may be faith in a person, in astrology, even in an Oriental philosophy. In the darkest hours, the sense of being part of a Grand Scheme can make one's own trouble seem relatively insignificant.

A philosophical attitude can also prove reassuring. Like the ancient Romans, we can be stoical, taking a catastrophe with the courage of resignation. An editor I know, who has had multiple hard knocks recently, quotes

Ralph Waldo Emerson, "Finish each day and be done with it. You have done what you could. . . . Tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely."

Family and friends can be helpful not only for comforting but to provide motivation to try for a comeback. If someone close to you has undergone a loss, let it be known that you care. Be available. Try not to be overly sympathetic, but respect his disappointment or grief. Let him "cry," allowing him a chance to digest the loss and to get over it. "Give him time," advises Doctor Linn, "to pick up the pieces that still work and put them together again." Try to support his faith and courage, his ability to deal with his feelings.

As an example: when a man loses his job and his self-esteem has plummeted, his wife should avoid reproaching him or showing her worry too openly—which only further damages his morale. "Caring for a jobless man," says psychologist Mortimer R. Feinberg, "requires discipline and fortitude. He may need subtle flattery and quiet amusement. The wife should stay cool, discuss their problems unemotionally. Her whole being should be concentrated on giving—giving warmth, encouragement and ego reinforcement."

What most people don't realize is that an upsetting experience can have a positive outcome, enabling the stricken to mature. "A hazardous event is a call to new action," observes social scientist, Lydia Rapoport. "It can be conceived of as a threat, a loss or a challenge. Viewed as a challenge, it is more likely to be met with a mobilization of energy and purposeful action."

John F. Kennedy, as his "Profiles in Courage" revealed, grew as a human being during and after his long hospital siege for a back disability. Often adversity draws couples closer together. Many a widow, once passively dependent, grows to assume the added role of father with her children.

The key is the dual quality of crisis. When the Chinese write "crisis," they do it in two characters: one meaning "danger," the other "opportunity." The opportunity is to build new foundations. Studies at Harvard show that people who handle a crisis well are prone to strengthen their potentialities for a rewarding life. Thus it is possible to "profit" from misfortune.

Suffering and tragedy seem to have contributed to the greatness of such men as Abraham Lincoln. It was Lincoln who gave us this enduring precept: "When you come to the end of your rope, tie a knot in it and hang on." ♦

Keys to Coping

To deal constructively with adversity, the following steps are suggested by the Rev. Donald E. Smith, director of the American Foundation of Religion and Psychiatry:

- Face up to it. Get your deepest and darkest feelings out in the open. The biggest block to the healing process is an inability to confront gut-feelings honestly.
- Take the measure of the crisis realistically so that you know what you have to deal with. If a teen-ager is found to be on drugs, parents can try to talk to him about his real feelings. If a young woman's fiancé has left her, she should ask herself whether she is suffering from a loss of love or a loss of pride? Was he, after all, a bad choice as a partner?
- Focus your strength on solving the problem. Consider my friend, Bill M., an engineer. At 37, with a wife, three children and a mortgage, he recently was thrown out of work. At first he felt shattered, seeing himself as a loser. Knowing that millions of others are in the same fix was no comfort. After the shock wore off and he had a chance to size up his plight, Bill realized he had to get hold of himself. He concentrated all his energy on regaining his self-confidence. He composed a résumé of his experience and determinedly went after a new job. In this way, he assured himself of success.

Finally, recognize that you may need professional help, an objective outsider. The deeply disturbed and depressed may have to see a clinical psychologist or psychiatrist. In the case of an agonizing separation or divorce, a marriage counselor or lawyer can provide the needed guidance.

Inherent in these four rules are other elements of the coping process.

Generally, the more resources you have to draw upon at the time of the blow, the better you can contend with it. Dr. Louis Linn puts it this way, "The better you've done your homework as a human being—developed concern for others and the world about you, established a stable family life and kept open the channels for love and excitement—the more likely you are to meet the inevitable crises effectively."

During and after the first reaction of self-pity, it is hard to think of the world outside yourself. When baseball star Roy Campanella became a paraplegic after a crushing auto accident, he was profoundly depressed, his career wrecked. Every effort to cheer him failed. One day, someone mentioned ham radio. It ignited the spark he needed. He bought equipment and began talking to people all over the globe. Thereafter his mental outlook improved remarkably. "Campy" had ceased to turn inward.

You can't commit yourself to the next chapter until you have cleared away the previous unpleasant one. In many families, when the loss of a child is finally accepted, another child is adopted or the couple has another baby. "This," comments Doctor Linn, "is an affirmation of life."

Ventilation, through anger, can be healthy, but it may also alienate good friends unless they understand it is your way of responding to adversity.

Everyone has his own timing. Grieving over a death, you can go off alone "in your wilderness," turning your face to the wall. For some it takes a year to complete the work of mourning. But the loss should be kept within realistic boundaries.

Easter Is a Time for Delicate Decorations

BY SALLY NELSON
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

This Centerpiece combines colored egg shells with artificial lily-of-the-valley and greens. Women in the Neenah-Menasha Y classes, along with many others in the area, are decorating their homes for Easter to give special meaning to the Spring holiday.

NEENAH-MENASHA — "Easter is my favorite holiday of the year," remarked one woman who is attending the Easter and Spring decorating classes at the YWCA Community Center.

She explained that during the Lenten season, preceding Easter, she has time to think about the holy day, to prepare special dishes and, especially, to clean and then decorate her home for the special event.

Before Christmas, she said, she is just too rushed to really enjoy preparations for the day. Apparently, many women in the Twin Cities, agree with her. The Y Easter craft class now concluding, is filled to capacity and many women, both in and out of the class, have announced that they are planning, or have made, Easter trees for their homes.

Conducting the Y class is Mrs. Eugene Kanabay, Neenah, president of the YWCA House and Garden Club. Mrs. Kanabay is well-known for her craft work with all kinds of flowers, including garden blossoms, and artificial and miniature flowers which she uses in pictures and in small decorations.

It Sometimes takes a lot of clutter to come up with a beautiful egg. Above, Mrs. Eugene Kanabay, instructor of the YWCA Community Center Easter and Spring Decorating classes, helps Mrs. Dale Berken, Menasha, trim what should be a satin masterpiece.

At Left, Mrs. John Koltz, Neenah, finds it takes a deft touch to decorate a styrofoam-covered-with-satin-thread egg. Pins and glue hold ornamentations. Above is a lovely centerpiece, designed and made in the Y Easter craft classes.

P.I.G. Stands for Pride--Integrity--Guts

EDITOR'S NOTE — Women married to policemen have a constant worry: Will wife today be widow tomorrow? Here's how a south Philadelphian copes with that daily question.

By DEE WEDEMEYER
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Every work day Rose Ann Guarnere straps her husband's gun on his uniform, kisses him goodbye and makes a ritual of saying, "God bless and I love you."

Then she spends the rest of the day hoping and worrying about his return.

She is a policeman's wife. It is a role she neither relishes nor regrets. She just wishes someone could hear her side of the story.

She holds no grudges against the neighbor who shouts out, "A little payola, there, Joe?" when her husband carries in a package.

Nor does she mind the people who, in her presence, complain about high taxes when the police salaries are raised.

She does not mind the pickets she sees on news broadcasts carrying signs that refer to policemen as "pigs."

That did bother her until someone told her P.I.G. stood for "Pride, Integrity and Guts."

But recently she saw something else on television and it bothered her to the core—a policeman's widow at her husband's funeral.

"I watched that woman on television. I thought it could have been me... What would I tell my children that their father died for? Daddy was out there doing his job, doing right... Who would take the place of Joe?"

Although Rose Ann has always worried about her husband, she had the security of knowing he worked in Roxborough, predominantly middle class neighborhood, where teen-agers stealing cars for joy rides and house burglaries represent the main crimes.

Then one day Joe Kelly, the co-worker of Joe's whose funeral Rose Ann watched on television, drove up a dimly-lit street and stopped a car being driven without lights.

The man, driving a stolen vehicle, shot him in the heart.

Joe Guarnere was one of the first on the scene.

"When I opened the car, I took one look at the blood and said, 'He's dead.'"

When Guarnere returned to the station he called Rose Ann and told her, "Joe Kelly got it."

All Rose Ann could think of was that normally Joe would have been in a car cruising, but that night he was in the police wagon, a two-man vehicle.

Later she learned another policeman had been killed that same day by a 15-year-old boy who said he wanted to avenge the shooting of a mentally retarded black man by two patrolmen.

Both the dead policemen had been riding in one-man cars, a bone of contention among Philadelphia's 7,000 man police force.

The shootings sent the force into a two-week alert in which men worked 12-hour shifts so two men could ride in each car.

For the two weeks Rose Ann sent her husband to work at 6 p.m. He didn't return until the next morning at 6 a.m.

A neighbor told Rose Ann, "Think of the overtime."

"Everybody will forget in two weeks," she said sadly.

"But there are two widows who have to make up for many tomorrows. Nothing could ever give me my husband. No scholarships. No funds. Nothing. They'll forget Joe Kelly. But I feel like it should be a constant reminder of what society is turning out to be... What kind of people are living in this city?"

For Rose Ann and Joe there are poignant reminders. Joe has had to drive the same car Joe Kelly drove. The blood stains are still there, and there's a bullet hole in the automobile body. On his badge, Joe wears a strip of black elastic, a sign worn for 30 days when a policeman is killed in the line of duty.

It's the fifth time in 18 months he's had to wear it. In previous years the bands were made of paper, but recently the men have begun using more durable material. Joe always carries a spare band.

Normally, Joe's schedule rotates between 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., 4 p.m. to midnight or midnight to 8 a.m. Rose Ann tries to maintain a normal schedule. But there are irritations—she can't change the sheets because he's in the bed, and if he's five minutes late she finds herself pacing from the kitchen to the door.

Most of the day is spent cleaning their neat, South Philadelphia row house and fixing lunch for their two sons, Gene 5, and Joe, 9. Basically Rose Ann's life revolves around her husband.

"I really have changed since Joe has been on the force," says Rose Ann. "I tend to put everything in the background. Joe's No. 1. That shooting is fresh in my mind. It could happen to me too."

The Guarneres live a simple life. Occasionally they go out. They have discovered that mixing socially with non-police couples usually ends with their having to answer for the police force.

Bugged by Questions

"If you're married to a policeman you really get it," says Rose. "They ask, 'Why this? Why do they have to do this?' A lot of time I say no comment. Usually a person already has his mind made up. In my heart I feel that Joe is doing the best he can. If he says he's right, he's right. That's how much trust and faith I have in him."

Joe's salary, about $10,000 yearly, does not allow for many luxuries but they do have a color television set and stay home to watch it.

His parents live nearby and visit often. At least twice a week his mother calls and asks hesitantly, "Is everything all right?" Rose Ann promised her mother-in-law that if anything happened to Joe she will call her first.

The Guarneres' children are young enough that they have not been affected by their father's job. Some policemen's children find themselves being looked on in school as narcotics agents. Others are faced with the dilemma of what to do when the kids start calling policemen "pigs."

Young Joe did come home from Mass one day and ask, "Why did the priest pray for the policemen?"

All things considered, Rose Ann still thinks the drawbacks are overcome by the fact that Joe is so happy with his work.

Guarnere joined the force in September 1969, after 10 years as a cover board cutter at a publishing house. Earlier he had been interested in becoming a policeman, but Rose Ann did not encourage him. The first time he took the police exam he failed. The second time he passed. She didn't have the heart to oppose his choice.

Rose Ann met Joe in 1969 when she was 19. He was 21 and fresh from the Marines Corps.

Joe derives strength from his Marine Corps service and insists that Rose Ann live up to the Marine image, too. When she is discouraged he tells her, "Be a Marine."

"I'm having babies by Caesarian and he says 'Be a Marine,'" she says with a laugh.

Rose Ann is not a politically active woman but she did recently join "Police Wives and Interested Citizens for Action," a group formed two years ago to lobby for policemen's rights and against citizen brutality.

At this organization's urging, Rose Ann and 20 other women sent their children to babysitters and braved a snowstorm to attend a hearing for the two policemen who shot the mentally retarded man. Most wear their blue "Police Wives" ribbons. Some have miniature replicas of their husband's badge dangling around their neck.

For four hours they listen, as minor cases were brought up—a case was dismissed against a man arrested for selling New Jersey lottery tickets because the arresting policeman didn't actually witness the sale.

Finally the case against the policeman was called. Rose Ann sat on the edge of her seat.

The injured man's brother testified that he shouted at the policemen that his brother was retarded but they shot anyway. He said one stepped within three feet of his brother, already felled by one shot, and aimed before shooting.

Other testimony conflicted. Finally the judge dismissed the case.

From the courtroom there were cries of "Ain't no justice in Philadelphia." "Pigs." "They'll get theirs." Television cameras recorded the scene as the spectators filed out. Across the street pickets held angrily worded posters.

"I'm glad I came," said Rose Ann. "If my Joe were in there I'd have wanted someone to support him..."

She squared her shoulders and raised her head a little higher. Then she exited through the sea of angry faces.

Policeman Joe Guarnere gives a goodbye hug to his younger son as he prepares to go out and ride in the patrol car in which his co-worker was shot and killed a few days before by a man riding in a stolen car.

The Pistol belt is buckled on over Philadelphia Police Patrolman Joe Guarnere's uniform, as it is every work day with a helping hand from Mrs. Guarnere. On his badge Joe bears the strip of black elastic worn for 30 days when a policeman has been killed in the line of duty. At right, Mrs. Guarnere leaves a hearing for two policemen who had shot a mentally retarded black man. Her badge shows she is a policeman's wife, and she must face angry demonstrators across the street.

Complexion Problems Tied to Washing Habits

A high school teacher recently remarked on how many boys and girls reach their teens without ever learning how to wash their faces. So many of the complexion troubles of her youngsters, she said, result from neglecting their skin—from seeming ignorance of how to apply soap and water. This seems astonishing, but the art of washing a face so that it gets thoroughly clean is one that must be learned. Any mother will do her own teenagers a great service by giving them a few wise words about skin care and good grooming in general.

Boys as well as girls need to know how to use soap and water to the best advantage. Hasty, careless face-washing does not remove dirt and grime, and thus permits skin pores to become clogged. So teach youngsters to lather face, neck, and ears with a generous hand—and to work the soapy lather well into the skin. Hit-and-miss rinsing is just as bad as hit-and-miss soaping. Both soaping and rinsing must be thorough.

Another good by-product to proper face-washing—besides a nice complexion—is that head-to-toe grooming becomes important when a teen is encouraged to consider what cleanliness can accomplish. A clean face naturally goes with clean hands—and that leads to clean hair and then to clean clothes and well-shined shoes. It all adds up to a worthwhile investment in time and effort.

Devines Tackle Move to Bay

April 4, 1971

Sunday Post-Crescent C 4

Duluth, she was majoring in speech and English. Joanne and Dan were married in their junior year, but Mrs. Devine never graduated. "I had the twins instead," she said.

The twins, Mary Jo and Jennifer, 23, are the oldest of seven children, and our readers are the first to know that in May the Devines will be grandparents for the first time. Mary Jo and her husband, who live in Manhattan, Kans., will have the help of "mother" who is trying to arrange everything so she "can be on hand."

Jennifer, "who moves in and out of the house as her economy dictates," works with young children at the Mental Health Center in Columbia "on the other side of town."

Diana, 20, moved to Green Bay when her father did and Danny, 16; Sarah, 13; Lisa, 12, and Jill, 10, all are in school from fourth grade to junior high.

Fortunately, the whole family likes football and they go to the games en masse. "Our little ones often have gone in baby carriages," Mrs. Devine admits.

There always have been football players and coaches and their wives around the Devine home. If there weren't players or their families, there were movies, charts, and of course, trophies. "Danny is never very far from his father when he is talking about or working with football at home," Mrs. Devine said.

Naturally, the conversation turned to Green Bay, the search for a home with room for three dogs, the children and visiting grandchild and other guests, again, including grandmother.

Mrs. Devine's mother Mrs. John Brookhart, has lived with the Devines for 13 years in a lovely room on the first floor, but she plans to stay in Columbia where she is moving into a house in the woods, with a friend who shares her love for ceramics and crafts.

Although grandmother prefers not to "go back north."

— Mrs. Devine was born in Duluth — the rest of the family is ready. The big test took place the weekend of Feb. 12 when the children on a visit to Green Bay (1) saw the stadium (2) went house-hunting (3) ice skated at an outdoor school rink (4) skated indoors at the Arena (5) had dinner and swam at the Forum and (6) enjoyed an afternoon of snowmobiling.

Mrs. Devine is no newcomer to winter sports. In fact, Duluth is the home of the original Ice Follies as they are known today, and Mrs. Devine, was a flower in the first performance presented by Shipstad and Johnson at the Curling Club in Duluth.

It won't be long now before Green Bay will be welcoming its "first family," as one Packer fan identified the Devines. But Mrs. Devine will still expect the girls to ask, "May I wear my shorts, Mom?" It will be a family where home is important, school is serious business, social life is informal, and where football autographs will be treasured.

Collie Flower, one of the Devines three dogs, heard Jill coming home from school when she was still way down the block. Tied up during the day, she is free to romp in the yard when the children come home. Quick to join them was Smacker, just all dog, and way behind the two was calm Potsy, the dignified Dachshund, too late to get in the picture.

Frost-Free Appliances Not Care Free

Frost-free refrigerators are certainly work savers. However, homemakers do need to clean these appliances thoroughly a few times each year. It really is so easy since the messy ice melting process is no more.

For safety, first unplug the refrigerator and turn all controls to "off," especially the signal arm of an automatic icemaker. Take out all food and protect frozen items from thawing. Remove parts such as crispers, meat pans, shelves, and light fixtures. At the sink wash everything in warm sudsy water. A gentle-action scouring pad may be used to clean stubborn food particles from racks. Be sure to remove and wash the water evaporating tray and air grill below the unit. With the crevice tool attachment, vacuum the condenser and other areas where dust may collect. Then wipe the entire inside of the refrigerator and freezer. Refit components and replace food, wiping all jars and containers with a sudsy sponge first. Plug in the appliance and turn controls on.

Two Incidents Change Life of Young Indian Woman

April 4, 1971 Sunday Post-Crescent C 9

WEST-DE PERE — Jolene Simms is a determined but soft spoken young lady, and she will lean toward you confidentially as she recounts quietly the major events which have changed her life.

It was a television advertisement for the Job Corps by Loren Greene and then, later, at a Job Corps Center, the counsel of a young VISTA volunteer "that turned it all around for me," "Jodie" explains.

A 23-year-old Seminole Indian, Jodie is now a B-average student at St. Norbert College, West De Pere. She had maintained a less than average record in high school. And now from a prospective "career" as a babysitter she has her eyes set on a law degree which will enable "me to help my people."

The sophomore coed, attired in a casual costume of loafers, loose fitting blouse and jeans, explains how the two incidents gave a new direction to her life.

She had graduated in 1967 from Wilkinsburg High School in Pennsylvania where, for a variety of reasons, her grades had been poor. "I had taken a job as a baby sitter, and one night when I was working I saw Loren Greene on television talking about opportunities in the Job Corps. I went home and talked about it with my parents, but they didn't think Indians would be allowed in the Job Corps," Jodie says.

Indians Accepted
"I found out they were by calling the Job Corps offices in Pittsburgh," she recalls. The number had been furnished as part of the television announcement.

After almost a five-month delay caused in part because her original application papers had been delayed, Jodie was assigned in November, 1967, to the Jobs Corps Center in Huntington, Va. "It was the best darn job center they had," the coed maintains loyally. The center has since been terminated although one in Charleston remains open.

Second Incident
It was almost a year to the day of her November arrival, "it was the 29th," she says emphatically, that the second pivotal event of her young life took place. The girls had invited to dinner a number of young men, among them a young VISTA volunteer who became friendly with Jodie. "He had two years of college and felt that he had earned some kind of vacation," the coed says. "I had always thought that college was a waste of time, but he told me that that's where it's at and that through education I could help my people more. I had told him that I thought about being a lawyer and of working on a reservation, and he told me the only way I could do this would be by going to college. I promised him I would try," Jodie said.

During the two years she was at the Jobs Corps Center she studied classes in reading, mathematics, business machine courses and took on-the-job training qualifying as a P B X switchboard operator and worked on IBM machines. "It was fun," she says of the days which began at 6 a.m. and included classes from 8 a.m. until noon and from 1 until 3 p.m. There was gym from 3 until 5 p.m., a two-hour block that was "our time," club meetings from 7 until 9 p.m. and two more hours of personal time before bed at 11 p.m.

The training was marvelous, she feels, and the weekends in which "there was always planned recreation," allowed her to visit and see many things she wouldn't otherwise have experienced.

After graduation from the Jobs Corps Center in June of 1969, she went to the JCYW program at the McCormick YWCA in Chicago. There she worked on an IBM job for three months in the Federal Building, and then for five months she was a general secretary at the Jobs Corps offices, graduating in January of 1970.

It was at the Job Corps offices in Chicago where Jodie first became acquainted with St. Norbert College. Her boss had known William Murphy, now vice president for advancement at St. Norbert College, when Murphy was in the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity. "I had heard that there were two large Indian tribes in Wisconsin (Oneida and Menomonee) and I thought there would be lots of Indians at the school," the coed says.

Contact with Mr. Murphy "who has helped me so much," and with the school's financial aids office resulted in a full scholarship and while Jodie hasn't found as many Indian students as she would have hoped, "I am glad I came here," she says.

The college actually has 15 Indian students and will enroll 15 more this summer, primarily from Upward Bound, for a higher total than that to be found at any other Wisconsin college.

Indian Symposium

Jodie has associated closely with the Indian students at the school and she participated in an Indian symposium held there last spring. While she has yet to declare a major she is maintaining a B average in her general courses and will complete her third semester of work this spring. She still has her heart set on an eventual law degree "because my people need lawyers," she says.

When things get tough she recalls a day early in her Job Corps Center training when she thought of going home and called her parents. "My dad told me to stick it out," she says, and "I wasn't sorry. He had a saying that when things got rough that was when the Indian pride made us work harder at it."

Jodie's mother and father, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Simms, still reside at Wilkinsburg where her father drives a truck. She has four brothers and three sisters who used to join her and "dress as boys" to help their father in his work. "He used to say girls don't work on trucks, but he let us come because he knew how much we wanted to help," she says fondly.

And what of the young VISTA volunteer whose advice led from Job Corps to college? "I still write to him," Jodie says. "He has finished his tour in VISTA and he has returned to school in San Francisco."

Voluntary Public Service for Youth

Part I

The idea for a voluntary two-year public service program for all youth, male and female, between the ages of 18 and 28 is not a new one. Yet it deserves re-examination as a means to solve many of the problems of youth and of our time. The Peace Corps, Vista and the Civilian Conservation Corps all contained the germs of this same concept. But a more comprehensive program is now needed to serve not only our nation's youth, but also educational and social services that are on the verge of collapse. The CCC is being partially revived, but this is not a large enough program to satisfy today's needs.

Voluntary and compulsory public service for youth has at times been perverted. In Nazi Germany it served to militarize youth. Modern China employed such a system to remove troublesome students from the cities and to provide forced labor in rural areas. A voluntary national youth program in the United States would require proper safeguards against para- or actual militarization or use of youth labor to weaken living-wage standards for adults. But potential shortcomings or past misapplication of the idea of voluntary youth service should not prevent our trying to perfect it. Even now, every medical student, fresh out of graduate school, puts in a stint as an intern in a hospital at minimal pay. This is national service of a sort. There is no reason why the same principle could not be expanded to include all youth who wish to perform public service and who at the same time would earn or pay back tuition for a higher education with work.

Many Objectives

Properly planned, such a program could allow every young man or woman to choose his or her area of work. It would advance their vocational or professional goals. A student might be enabled to complete his education either before or after such service, serving in any capacity for which his training and education qualifies him. Day-care health and hospital services, welfare, pollution control, environmental protection, urban renewal and maintenance of public property and recreation facilities, among many other essential programs and services are now in the process of being increased costs and lack of personnel. A national voluntary youth service program could maintain and restore some of these essential services.

Every young man or woman would be paid the same, minimal base pay without distinction, except for allowances to take care of special circumstances. At the same time each would receive credits towards a higher education at any institution of his or her choice. In other words, by signing up for voluntary national service for a two year period on graduation from high school, a student could first complete his higher education before serving, or, if undecided on his career, he or she might serve first and continue schooling thereafter. Due to the rapidly rising costs of higher education, such a program of "earning to learn" would go far to pay for college, university and vocational institutions that are now on the verge of bankruptcy.

Last but not least, a program of national voluntary youth service could help to reorient the outlook of many of today's disenchanted youth. They would have a chance to exercise their ideals, skills and education in the service of visible social goals to which all can subscribe. They would then be enabled to identify better than now with the ideas and ideals of our society by being allowed to do something about its problems. They would have the chance to devote their energies, interests and talents to areas of genuine need. They would be given an opportunity to improve and deteriorating quality of life.

Such a program could lead to abuses, unless the necessary safeguards are built into it from the start. But they can be avoided if proper review and evaluation procedures are written into the original legislation. A minimum of bureaucratization, stress on individual accountability and responsibility, could assure a high rate of success.

Israel Won't Accept Offer

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Israel is expected to reject Egypt's new peace offer today despite President Anwar Sadat's threat of renewed fighting along the Suez Canal by month's end, sources close to the Israeli cabinet said.

The Israeli cabinet is to meet and discuss the Egyptian president's proposal but the sources said Premier Golda Meir would probably reject it outright.

They said Israel may counter later with the so-called "Dayan plan" for reopening the canal. This plan, attributed to Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, calls for a gradual thinning of Israeli and Egyptian forces on both sides of the Suez with Egyptian technicians permitted to cross onto the Israeli-held east side for canal-clearing operations.

April Agreement
Sadat, quoted as saying a solution must be reached in April, offered to accept a new ceasefire and to reopen the canal if Israeli troops would pull back from the waterway and from part of the Sinai Peninsula. Under his proposal, Egyptian troops would then cross the canal and take up the territory now held by the Israelis.

Israeli officials condemned Sadat's offer but Deputy Premier Yigal Allon, in an interview over the state radio, said Israel has agreed in principle to the canal's reopening. Jerusalem, he said, "would not doubt have to submit its own proposal for a partial settlement" covering the canal that was blocked by scuttled boats in the 1967 war.

Information Minister Israel Galili, one of Mrs. Meir's closest associates, called Sadat's proposal "absurd" during a radio interview in Tel Aviv. Israel could not accept a takeover of the Sinai by an Egyptian army "and perhaps a Soviet army with it," he said.

Response Stung
Apparently stung by initial response to his plan, Sadat was quoted by the semi-official Cairo newspaper Al-Ahram as saying that April "is the month which shall decide between a solution and war."

The report said Sadat wanted all parties involved, including the United States and the United Nations to "define within this month their position in practical and precise terms."

Israeli opposition continued to mount, however.
Tourism Minister Moshe Kol disclosed that Jerusalem already had rejected a proposal by U.S. Asst. Secretary of State Joseph Sisco calling for an Israeli troop withdrawal back 19-25 miles from the canal.

Kol said the "Sisco proposal was actually the same Soviet and Egyptian proposal in American dressing."

There was no official comment on Sadat's warning.
Communications Minister Shimon Peres said it would be "outright madness" for Israel to accept Sadat's proposal and it would be a disaster if the plan were implemented.

Ezer Weizman, chairman of the opposition right-wing Gahal coalition and a former deputy chief of staff, said that from the military view, the Suez Canal was the best line to hold the Sinai Peninsula. From a political standpoint, he said, it was Israel's strongest card not to be used except in an over-all settlement with Egypt.

Kol said it was the government's decision that no Egyptian or Soviet troops should be permitted on the east bank of the canal. But he said he could foresee a possible joint Israeli-Egyptian patrol on that side of the canal.

Block Attempt
Al-Ahram said Egypt claims to have blocked a recent Israeli attempt to cross the northern sector of the canal.
It said two Israeli frogmen attempted to cross the waterway at Ras el Ish but withdrew when they saw an Egyptian patrol had spotted them.

Al-Ahram said Israeli troops in the eastern side covered the retreat of their men with machine-gun fire. The Egyptians shot back, it added.
In Gaza, a grenade thrown at an Israeli army vehicle Saturday wounded five Israelis and one Arab, the Israeli military command said.

were responsible for the sale of tribal land to non-Indians.

While DRUMS spokesmen said tribal decisions being made by "small groups of people" had to end, Enterprises officials said a corporation cannot be run efficiently with all shareholders making the decisions.

Postponing Action
The DRUMS leaders did succeed in postponing action on a resolution offered by Enterprises officials petitioning Congress to consider reversing some of the adverse effects of terminating the reservation, and to place the Menominee County forests under federal trusteeship for the tribe to escape tax liability.

Taxes are a major factor in Enterprises decisions. The lake development and land sales are intended to bring cottage owners into the county to lift some of the burden from the Enterprises, which pays 60 per cent of the county taxes.

But DRUMS leaders want Congress to place all Menominee lands in trusteeship to safeguard them against further sales to outsiders. They also are proceeding with legal action to prevent construction of a third and final dam to finish the artificial enlargement of the chain of lakes.

Saturday's session was recessed to resume later at night when accountants were to announce the outcome of the election of five members of the voting trust.

In an effort to placate opposition charges of lack of representation, Enterprises officials have ordered the board expanded from seven to 11 members and their terms shortened from five to two years each.

There were 15 candidates for the four new seats and one existing post. Seven were DRUMS-supported. Five, including one DRUMS candidate, were endorsed by the present trustees, and five others ran without endorsement.

Fulbright Warns of Trend

U.S. Sliding Into Dictatorship?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Due to three decades of war, an obliging Congress and isolated presidents, the American form of constitutional democracy is evolving into a presidential dictatorship, Sen. J.W. Fulbright said Saturday night.

Since World War II, the Arkansas Democrat and chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said, the United States has been in a state of "permanent institutionalized crisis."

In this period, he said, each president has been "unencumbered to make war or commitments abroad essentially as he sees fit, drawing Congress into the decision-making insofar as he finds it useful and convenient."

"Strong" Presidency
"Only if one subscribes to the cult of the 'strong' presidency which mesmerized American political science in the fifties and early sixties can one look with complacency on the growth of presidential dictatorship in foreign affairs."

He gave his views in a speech prepared for delivery at Yale University but released by his office here.

Although both houses of Congress—particularly the Senate—have clamped down harder in the past year than anytime in modern history on the President's military and foreign affairs proposals, Fulbright said.

Nixon also was engaged in a major diplomatic effort—preparing a speech announcing further U.S. troop withdrawals in Vietnam. The speech will be broadcast nationally on television and radio from his White House office at 9 p.m. EST Wednesday.

Ziegler said Nixon would be working during the weekend and Monday on the Vietnam speech, which will be the President's fifth announcement on troop withdrawals.

Ehrlichman was asked whether Nixon's decision would commit any future president to act in the Calley case or any other involving California and like it. He said there was "no its unemployment and welfare reform problems."

He also turned over six miles of beautiful California beach, open the dikes to many more near his San Clemente home to the state. It had been Marine Corps property.

He said it was the beginning of a program to give back federal land across the nation for recreational and park use if it is not getting high-priority government use.

Nixon's California visit will end Monday when he flies back to Washington.

Mrs. Nixon will depart a day earlier to prepare for two big White House social events, a traditional annual Senate luncheon Monday and a big white tie dinner for ambassadors of the Organization of American States and representatives of Western Hemisphere countries.

During his stay in California, Nixon made a number of decisions involving California and like it. He said there was "no its unemployment and welfare reform problems."

the efforts are not sufficient to stop "the trend toward authoritarian government."

One of the measures aimed at curbing executive power, introduced by Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., would require Senate confirmation of any commitment of U.S. troops abroad. In an emergency the president could deploy troops, but would have to get approval within 30 days or withdraw the forces.

Fulbright said the current advise-and-consent function of the Senate "has been so diminished that little or no cognizance is now taken of the Senate's counsel."

"The trend, I am now convinced, is irreversible as long as we continue to play the kind of role we are now playing in the world, as long as our course remains one of great-power militarism."

He said American foreign policy has subverted "the very end it is meant to serve."

"Like the American major in Vietnam who found it necessary to 'destroy Ben Tre in order to save it,' we may find some day, without quite knowing when or how or why it happened, that we have destroyed our own constitutional democracy—in order to save it."

Fulbright, in his prepared text, avoided personal attacks on President Nixon but returned repeatedly to his theme that institutions are to blame for what he sees as an emerging presidential authoritarianism.

The evolution began with President Franklin D. Roosevelt and has continued, he said, with little substantive objection from Congress.

judicial process was completed "that would be interfering." But by waiting to the point just before a sentence would be carried out, Ehrlichman maintained that Nixon was doing "the very opposite."

Washington Monday
Nixon's California visit will end Monday when he flies back to Washington.

Mrs. Nixon will depart a day earlier to prepare for two big White House social events, a traditional annual Senate luncheon Monday and a big white tie dinner for ambassadors of the Organization of American States and representatives of Western Hemisphere countries.

During his stay in California, Nixon made a number of decisions involving California and like it. He said there was "no its unemployment and welfare reform problems."

He also turned over six miles of beautiful California beach, open the dikes to many more near his San Clemente home to the state. It had been Marine Corps property.

He said it was the beginning of a program to give back federal land across the nation for recreational and park use if it is not getting high-priority government use.

Yippies Plan Spring Protest

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Hundreds of the nation's Yippies gathered here this weekend to dance, sing, get stoned and lay plans to join in a spring offensive against the Indochina war.

Just what the unpredictable Yippies, members of the Youth International Party, will eventually do is anyone's guess.

But ideas tossed out at Saturday conferences included taking part in the President's Easter egg roll on the White House lawn and staging a festival in Chicago's Lincoln park April 11.

Appears as Massacre: Nixon in '68

WASHINGTON (AP) Following are the views of President Nixon on the My Lai incident as expressed in a news conference Dec. 8, 1969:

Q. In your opinion, was what happened at My Lai a massacre, an alleged massacre, or what was it? And what do you think can be done to prevent things like this?

A. Well, to answer all of those questions and sorting it out, I would start first with this statement: what appears was certainly a massacre and under no circumstances was it justified....

We cannot ever condone or use atrocities against civilians....

Now when you use the word "alleged" that is only proper in terms of the individuals involved. Under our system a man is not guilty until proved to be so. There are several individuals involved here who will be tried by military courts. Consequently we should say "alleged" as far as they are concerned until they are proved guilty.

As far as this kind of activity is concerned, I believe that it is an isolated incident. Certainly within this administration we are doing everything possible to find out whether it was isolated and so far our investigation indicates that it was....

Now this record of generosity does not mean that we are allowed to be smeared and slurred because of this kind of an incident. That is why I am going to do everything I possibly can to see that all of the facts in this incident are brought to light and that those who are charged, if they were found guilty, are punished.

Because if it is isolated, it is against our policy and we shall see to it that what these men did, if they did it, does not smear the decent men that have gone to Vietnam in a very, in my opinion, important cause.

Because if it is isolated, it is against our policy and we shall see to it that what these men did, if they did it, does not smear the decent men that have gone to Vietnam in a very, in my opinion, important cause.

Former Columnist Pakistan's U.N. Representative

BY ALEC COLLETT
Associated Press Writer
UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.
(AP) — The tiny, attractive dark woman in the sari looks more like a poetess than the fearless newspaper columnist who was banned by two presidents of Pakistan.

President Yahya Khan recently introduced her to visiting royalty with the comment: "This lady has already brought down two presidents, so I have to watch my step."

Begum Hamidullah, as she is known by the Islamic honorific, is editor-publisher of the Karachi Mirror. For three months, she is on leave of absence from her monthly magazine to represent Pakistan at the 25th U.N. General Assembly.

The experience is a new one for Zeb-un-Nissa, who looks to be in her 30s, but who actually is a grandmother.

A self-educated writer who left school at 15, she now sits as her country's chief representative in the assembly's Social and Humanitarian Committee. In the large, paneled committee room with its view of New York's East River, the Begum finds herself in what she calls "a miniature world." But she confesses it is different from what she expected when she arrived last September.

"Delegates don't express opinions," said the editor of her unaccustomed role. "They are only spokesmen for their governments. And in a personal capacity, one cannot contribute very much."

The daughter of an English mother and a Muslim judge, who was something of a literary figure, Zeb-un-Nissa was born in Calcutta, and before the age of 15, her poems had been published in various newspapers and magazines. She has since published three volumes of verse, much of which she wrote as a teen-aged bride.

"I was married very young," Begum Hamidullah said, explaining she is the mother of two daughters, Nilofar, 26, and Yasmine, 21.

Zeb-un-Nissa first worked as a journalist before the Indian subcontinent was partitioned in 1947. She wrote two weekly columns: "Feminine Touch" for the Evening Star, and "Between Ourselves" for the Morning News, both Calcutta newspapers.

She moved with her husband to West Pakistan in 1947, and there began a weekly column for Dawn, Pakistan's biggest daily newspaper.

"I wanted to bring in civil affairs and politics, and when I wrote about these things the editor of the magazine section objected," the Begum said.

The column was suspended from the Sunday women's section but Zeb-un-Nissa pursued the matter with the paper's editor until he agreed she could write a general column "on anything, including politics." So the feature was moved from the women's pages to the editorial page.

As a result, she developed an even greater interest in political issues, and her column, "Thru a Woman's Eyes," assumed national significance.

In 1951, Zeb-un-Hamidullah launched her own publication, the monthly, society-oriented, Mirror.

The magazine became one of Pakistan's most popular monthlies, and Zeb-un-Hamidullah's editorials were a talking point from Karachi to Dacca.

So much so that former President Iskander Mirza banned the publication for six months, but the publisher took legal action and the Supreme Court reversed the ruling.

Zeb-un-Nissa Hamidullah may look gentle but her political commentaries have been so fierce they were banned by two presidents of Pakistan.

The Mirror was banned a second time by Mirza's successor, President Ayub Khan. A "selective" boycott, the presidential order prevented its sale to diplomats and to army posts.

The Begum's editorial which prompted this action called on Ayub Khan to abdicate. Charging the president with repression and mismanagement, she wrote that Pakistan "will continue to erupt as long as you, Field Marshal Ayub Khan, continue as its president."

The editorial was published in Feb. 1969. Ayub Khan resigned one month later.

It is difficult to believe the mild-mannered writer who weighs only 95 pounds and stands one inch over 5 feet packs such forcefulness and conviction in her small frame. She gave up writing five years ago, however.

"Five or six years ago I found I was wearing myself out, running out of creative ideas," she said. "I was not giving my best so I stopped writing."

But she still broadcasts regularly for Radio Pakistan and has published a book of short stories, "The Young Wife."

Your Problems

Dog's Collar Would be Enough

BY ANN LANDERS

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I hope you won't think I am crazy, Ann. I need your help. My husband and I got Blaze when he was a puppy. He was a wonderful cocker spaniel and our boys grew up loving him. Last year when the youngest boy married, we decided to move into an apartment. The only place that met all our requirements (location, price, and size) would not allow dogs. So we took Blaze to my brother's farm in North Dakota. It was the hardest thing we ever had to do. I cried when we left him. So did my husband.

Yesterday my sister called to say Blaze had died. He wasn't sick or anything, just rolled over and gave up. My husband says Blaze died of a broken heart. I'm not so sure. He was 17 years old.

We want Blaze buried here in town but we can't get him because my husband broke his leg and isn't able to drive. My sister can't bring Blaze here because their car is laid up. What we need to know is can they mail him to us? — Sadness in Minnesota

Dear Sad: Sorry, the Post Office Department said no. So did the Health Department. How about if they bury Blaze up there and send you the collar?

Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I've had a headache for three days. The reason: I go to college full-time. So does my husband. I work after classes and come home around 5:30 p.m. to the washing and ironing, cooking, cleaning, not to mention the studying.

My husband feels that our apartment should be open to our friends at all times. Last week we had the same couple here five nights in a row. We did not invite them. They just came over. On top of everything else, they have a small child who drives me up the wall.

Last night after they left we had a hassle. My husband said if I didn't enjoy their company, I should leave for the library when they arrive and say I must study. Is it fair that I be driven out of my own home? We've been married only a year and have had no serious arguments, until now. Who is right? — Old at 20 in Madison

Dear 20: No wife should be told to go to the library to study. The apartment is just as much yours as it is your husband's. And what's with him that he can sit around with friends five nights straight? When does he study?

Your campus has a counseling service for students. Use it. You've got an unusual problem for an old married lady of 20.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I was dumbfounded by the letter from the girl who shoplifted over $300 worth of merchandise out of department stores because she wanted to see how much she could get away with. It was a game to her. In the meantime she had a closet full of stuff stashed away — with the price tags still on them.

I have a suggestion for that girl. If she really wants to have some fun, why doesn't she try sneaking the stuff back into the store? The proprietor will be very happy to have it. And I'm sure he won't press charges if he catches her. Suggest it, will you please — Store Owner Who Is Feeling the Crunch

Dear Crunch: No. But I will suggest that she take the merchandise to the store manager and say she wants to give it back. The chances for avoiding prosecution would be better if she made an open confession.

"The Bride's Guide," Ann Landers' booklet, answers some of the most frequently asked questions about weddings. To receive your copy of this comprehensive guide, write to Ann Landers, in care of your newspaper, enclosing a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 35 cents in coin.

Unmatched Family Starts Conversations

BY ERMA BOMBECK

A new baby-sitter once came to the house where I introduced her to the kids. She looked from one to the other, then carefully scrutinized their father and me and said, "What happened? None of you match."

I said, "I phoned 'em in." I could have. We have one of the most dissimilar, mismatched, variety-packed families you ever laid eyes on. No one has the same hair coloring, the same color of eyes or the same temperament.

One tans, one burns, one sulks, one talks you to death, one is freckled, one is bronze, one tall and lean, one chubby and close to the ground.

I don't think we ever really had a sense of humor about children until we were thrown a brown-eyed, freckled nose, redhead. Now, they're a real conversation piece.

One day at the bus stop a strange woman (not to be confused with a woman who is a stranger) approached me and said, "Is this your son?"

I nodded.

"Does his father have red hair?"

I said, "No."

"Did you have him late in life?"

I bristled. "Why do you ask?"

"Well, she smiled, 'my husband and I were blessed with a redhead very late in life. I had a friend who said one word everytime she looked at him . . . 'Rust!'"

I broke up everytime I thought about it. From then on my crazy quilt family became a joy. I became a woman of mystery. When carry-out boys said, "Does his father have red hair?" I'd reply huskily, "I can't remember."

I could change the color of my own hair four times a year and still look related to someone in the family.

But the greatest advantage to a family of opposites happened one Sunday in church. My son was sitting in the pew ahead of me where I duly noted there was a chunk of hair missing where before had been bubble gum. He had grabbed his school jacket with the zipper hanging loose down the front. And when he took it off, he revealed to the entire congregation words to live by: "Save Water: Bathe with Someone You Love."

A woman next to me whispered, "Can you imagine a mother sending a boy to church like that?"

I shook my head in disgust and whispered back, "She probably phoned him in."

Birth Causes Ripples Among Medical Men

By DEBORAH RANKIN
Associated Press Writer

QUINCY, Ill. (AP) — Kimberly Sue Bange's birth two weeks ago produced ripples in medical circles and now a dispute over the circumstances of her birth is creating waves.

She was born March 20 in an auto accident that killed her mother and injured her father and three step-brothers. The baby was rushed to a hospital by a passing motorist. She was released last Sunday.

Initial reports indicated the 8-pound 14-ounce infant was forced through her mother's abdominal wall and thrown out of the car by the impact of the crash. She escaped with superficial injuries and doctors termed the birth "medical history."

The Bange family physician says Kimberly Sue popped out of her mother's abdomen "in much the same way that seeds explode from a tomato if it's thrown on the ground."

But the Adams County coroner, Gerald Points, says the mother's abdomen was ripped open when the woman hit the car's dashboard and that the baby was born through "Caesarean section by violence."

Dr. Ervin Nichols, associate director of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists in Chicago, says descriptions of the woman's lacerations indicate the baby could have been expelled through the abdomen or the normal birth canal.

But Nichols rejected the theory that the baby was propelled through the abdomen solely by the force of the crash and said, "I've never heard of such a thing. It is the most inconceivable situation."

Dr. Ernst Griep, the family physician who examined Mrs. Robert Bange, 28, a week before the accident, said he believes the baby was born after the mother was thrown through the windshield and hit the ground.

He said he doubts the baby was expelled through the normal birth channel because the child was Mrs. Bange's first and the woman showed "no relaxation of the birth canal."

Old, Young at Berkeley

Generations Coexist Here

By MARTY THOMPSON
BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — This city is known best for its youth culture, but in the shadow of that group is a large community at the other end of life's span—Berkeley's senior citizens.

The elderly men and women sit on bus benches or shuffle past long-haired students and "street people" on and near the University of California campus.

Outnumbered three-to-two by the young, the 20,000 people in Berkeley who are 65 and over must scratch for scarce cheap housing in competition with the young.

Once settled, the two cultures coexist on the streets and in the neighborhoods, impinging on each other mainly on economic grounds and in the reaction by some oldsters to what they view as youthful excesses.

"I picked Berkeley on account of the university in the first place, but I think I might move away now because of the university," said a retired woman whose apartment two blocks off campus has acquired as a new neighbor a nightspot with a sign offering "live rock, hard blues."

"They're loud," she says of its youthful customers. "They park in our lot. They don't care. We could call and have their cars towed, but they'd probably blow up our car or house."

"This place is getting to be too revolutionary," said the woman, who refused to give her name.

Many, like 87-year-old Charles Goldhaber, came here in retirement to live with their families. Goldhaber, an archeologist in Egypt for 40 years, has been in Berkeley the last 10 years. He frequently strolls the city's streets and plays billiards in the faculty club on campus.

"I picked Berkeley because my son is a professor here," says Goldhaber. The violence "was not very pleasant. I think the university is a wonderful university. I was wondering that such a thing could happen."

A woman, 82, walking along Shattuck Avenue just off campus, says, "I turn my eyes the other way and say a little prayer."

"We hear from the older folks after every rampage," says C.B. McCormack, assistant city manager. "They say 'do something.' We don't hear from the youngsters about the oldsters."

Most young residents seem to pay little attention to the oldsters, and not all the old folks seem to object even to disruptions which don't touch them personally.

Attend Riots
"Some of our people attend the riots regularly," says Sally Shultz, director of a city-run activities center for senior citizens. "They feel the young people have something going, but wish they'd take a bath once in a while."

Ethan Lock, 19 a sophomore from Harrisburg, Pa., says he notices older people around campus, but "they don't seem too hostile to me or my friends. I really like the atmosphere."

"There is conflict," Lock says, "but most of the adults here are a lot cooler than at home; they've gotten used to it. I go back East with my long hair, and I get crucified."

Long-haired young people in blue jeans stroll past several boarded-up stores whose owners gave up after their windows were smashed and merchandise vanished during disorders that spread off the campus and down Telegraph Avenue in 1968.

Mixed in with the students and other youths are occasional white-haired senior citizens, their pace tuned to no particular schedule.

"I don't think there's any conflict except the ideological conflict," says Karen Uhlenbeck, 28, a mathematics lecturer at the University. "The two groups have the same problems—housing and a limited income."

Because they compete for the same low-cost housing, senior citizens and youths often share the same neighborhoods.

"I love it, and I live in hippie territory," says an older woman who has lived in Berkeley seven years and audits classes at UC. "The atmosphere is very alive and the community is alert. There should be a closer relationship between the campus and the community."

Some of the young residents think the atmosphere is healthy. "It gives the old people something to talk about, and they like to watch the hippies," says Mrs. Uhlenbeck. "Young people give the older generation something to talk about—the hair, the clothes—the older people think it's like going to the movies to walk down Telegraph Avenue."

Groups of old and young can be seen sitting on porches along some streets. "They watch each other," says Mrs. Uhlenbeck.

The nature of the city sharpens the conflict for housing. Berkeley is a core city in an urban area with no room for new housing and land too costly to qualify for low income projects.

87-Year-Old Charles Goldhaber came to Berkeley, Calif., 10 years ago to live in retirement with his family — like many of the older residents. Here he plays chess at Berkeley Senior Center, a city-run activities facility. But he also often plays billiards in the faculty club on campus, where his son is a professor. He thinks the university is wonderful, but not the violence: he wonders "how such a thing could happen." (APN Photo)

The average monthly income for an Alameda County resident on Social Security is $108. One in four people over 65 make less than $2,000 a year.

Besides the young, senior citizens must compete for affordable housing with members of minority groups that make up one-third of Berkeley's 114,000 residents.

Mrs. W. G. Wood, 76, who retired here after working for 23 years in nearby Oakland, says she, like many others, never has seen the "sometimes frightening" violent incidents, but has read about them.

"Nothing has been very close to me," she says. "We have very nice neighbors. You just live with it all."

A LONG CONCERN:

INDIGENTS
"People accused of crimes who cannot afford their own defense are costing us thousands of dollars. My proposal to place a ceiling of $16,000 on these costs would save taxpayers $15,000 this year alone and thousands more in years to come."

Palmer, Player, Casper Challenge

Nicklaus 6-1 Choice in Masters

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Arnold Palmer is hot again. Gary Player is even hotter. Bill Casper is rested and ready but Jack Nicklaus is the man to beat this week in the 35th Masters Golf Tournament.

It's Masters Week again. That means golf is coming alive. Seventy-nine hand-picked stars, some from as far away as Taiwan and Buenos Aires, tee it up Thursday at the Augusta National Club with Nicklaus, already holder of the PGA crown and eyeing a professional Grand Slam, standing all by himself as favorite at 6-1.

The men pressing him in the unofficial odds are those who have been most prominent in recent Masters history—Palmer, winner of two events this year and leading money winner.

Jack Nicklaus

Player, bounding in from consecutive victories at Jacksonville and Miami, and Casper, the defending champion who has been sitting out the Florida tour because of allergies to Florida insecticides.

8-1 Odds
The three of them are rated 8-1, followed by two foreign threats—U.S. Open champion Tony Jacklin of Britain and Bruce Devlin of Australia, bracketed at 10-1. Roberto de Vicenzo, the popular Argentine whose scorecard error cost him a tie with Bob Goalby in 1968, is rated 12-1 along with a cluster of American amateurs.

Arnold Palmer

can pros who have never won here—Frank Beard, Bert Yancey, Tom Weiskopf, Bruce Crampton and Dave Hill. Others rate from 15-1 to the 100-1 tag put on Hsieh Yung Yo of the Republic of China.

There is an aura about the Masters that distinguishes it from all other golf events. It is played on a magnificent course in a "Gone With the Wind" atmosphere.

The field is small and select. The tournament is flawlessly run. It is the mecca of merchants, promoters, agents and lovers of the game, who pour in from everywhere to stand in the shadow of the bridal white clubhouse and wander through the majestic pines.

Even the galleries are restricted. Tickets are limited to a reported 20,000 daily, most of them long time patrons. The tournament was a sellout months before the first practice ball was struck.

Columbia Broadcasting System will televise play Saturday and Sunday and along with the Canadian Broadcasting Company will broadcast live the last two days by radio.

The Augusta course is a lush, flower-bejeweled monster measuring 6,900 yards and playing par 72 which perfectly patterned for Nicklaus' powerful game.

The fairways are abnormally wide, giving the slugger plenty of hitting room. Many of them are hump-backed with small hills which Nicklaus and very few others are able to clear with a drive. The greens are enormous.

Big Jack has won here three

times, one less time than his rival, Palmer. In 1965, he set the tournament record of 271 with an overpowering performance which Bob Jones described as "a brand of golf of which I am unfamiliar."

Nicklaus, who has passed up the last two tournaments, will be keyed up for this one because his aim is to win more major championships than any other man—he now trails Jones' 13 by two—and to capture the four big titles—PGA, Masters, U.S. and British Opens—in a single year. He admits this may be the year.

"Sure, I've thought about it—it's the ambition of every man says. No player ever has won all four in a single year. Ben Hogan won all but the PGA in 1953. Bob Jones' fabled Grand Slam of 1930 included the U.S. and British Opens and the U.S. and British Amateurs.

Palmer, 41, is seeking to win his first major crown since the 1964 Masters. Believed by some to be over the hill after going 14 months without a tour victory, Arnie rallied this spring to win both the Bob Hope Classic and the Citrus Invitational.

At the Masters, his Army will be out in full cry. Player, whose 1961 victory made him the first and only foreigner to win here, sounded a warning when he won Jacksonville and Miami on consecutive week-ends. "I am at my peak. I've never played better," the South African says.

Casper, always formidable, has had a successful year, finishing second to Nicklaus in the PGA, but he has skipped the rest of the Florida tour.

The field will be made up of 54 U.S. pros, 10 U.S. amateurs, 14 foreign pros and a single foreign amateur. The foreign amateur is Gary Cowan of Canada.

Billy Casper

1966 U.S. amateur champion and 1961 Canadian Amateur champion. Top U.S. amateur is Lanny Wadkins, the national champion.

No amateur has ever won the Masters. The odds are 50-1 against it.

Faces 5 Year Sentence

Court to Decide Ali Fate in June

WASHINGTON (AP) — Muhammad Ali, the former world heavyweight boxing champion, is expected to learn in June whether he will have to serve his five year sentence for refusing induction into the Armed Services.

The Supreme Court has announced it will hear arguments April 19 on Ali's appeal that he was entitled to an exemption on religious grounds. The high court indicated it would rule on the case before the end of its current term sometime in June.

Ali, also known as Cassius Clay, was indicted on May 5, 1967 and convicted the following month. He was sentenced to five years and fined $10,000. He appealed, contending his Muslim religion barred him from fighting in any war that did not have Allah's blessing. Joe Frazier was recognized by most as the heavyweight champion after Ali's conviction. He outpointed Ali in their re-match as the champion.

Teams Must Realize Profit

Can't Blunt Player Incentive, But Dalton Suggests Pay Alternatives

MIAMI (AP) — Professional baseball, football, and basketball won't be able to tolerate spiraling salaries much longer. Baltimore Orioles personnel director Harry Dalton has predicted.

"Players deserve the right to make a good salary," Dalton said Tuesday. "but there has to be some opportunity for ball clubs to realize a profit if their operation is successful and well run."

At least 16 major league super stars have attained six figure incomes—including the Orioles' Frank Robinson, an estimated $130,000, and Brooks Robinson, at $100,000 — and more than a score of others are believed close to that income.

"I don't want to appear to be crying the blues about the Orioles' high salaries," said Dalton.

"At present the Orioles have the largest payroll in history—over $1 million. And deservedly so. We have many stars. There just is no question where it is going to lead."

Salaries Spiraled
Dalton suggested salaries have spiraled primarily due to the publicity given big-figure contracts and the players' desire to share in the radio-television income, whether or not the team had done well on the field or financially.

"(Baseball) must consider whether there might be some alternative which could bring player salaries more in keeping with each club's profit and loss position," he said.

"One alternative might be individual performance bonuses," which are now forbidden, he theorized. Another might be a plan in which players would share profits in excess of their salaries.

"I don't think anybody wants to see a limit put on anybody's salary," he added. "Nor do I want to see a player's incentive blunted in any way."

"I do think, though, the time has come . . . to recognize we must seriously consider some possible alternatives."

Hadl Will Be Fit for July Camp

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Quarterback John Hadl of the San Diego Chargers is home from the hospital, but he says the journey was not on horseback.

"I didn't saddle up," he admits. "I kind of hitchhiked."

Hadl was discharged from the hospital Friday after being treated for multiple injuries suffered a week ago in a horseback riding accident.

He suffered a fractured skull, a bruised knee and a fracture of the floor orbit of the left eye. He underwent surgery for the eye injury.

"I've had my last horse ride and so has my family," said Hadl.

Charger's Coach Sid Gillman said he expects Hadl will be able to begin exercising lightly in about two weeks and should be fully fit by the time the club starts preseason National Football League training in July.

Senators, Reds Home For Openers Monday

BY MIKE RATHET

NEW YORK (AP) — The 1971 baseball season begins Monday with traditional openers at Washington and Cincinnati in which the Senators will be without the services of right-hander Dick Nixon and the Reds will be without the services of first baseman Lee May and center fielder Bobby Tolan.

But while the spotlight will be on the Senators and Reds Monday it will shift throughout the country over a three-day stretch before all 24 teams have taken the field with sky-high hopes and matching payrolls for baseball's 102nd season.

Almost a score of players will be pocketing more than $100,000 each for their season's work, including such stars as Carl Yastrzemski, Willie Mays, Frank Howard, Hank Aaron, Bob Gibson, Frank Robinson, Pete Rose, Harmon Killebrew and three of the sport's most controversial figures—Curt Flood, Denny McLain and Richie Allen.

LA in Night Tilt

The latter three all will be on display Monday. Allen and his new Los Angeles Dodgers teammates begin play in a night game, after Flood and McLain have put on their new Washington uniforms.

Flood, who still is suing baseball, likely will be in the outfield, and McLain, suspended most of the 1970 season, will be on the bench, awaiting a Friday debut, when the Senators open against the Oakland A's in the Presidential Opener without the President.

Nixon will be flying from the Western White House to Washington Monday and is not expected to be on hand for the ceremonies surrounding the throwing out of the first ball, but there is a chance he will show up before the game ends.

Reds Meet Hawks

An hour after Senators' starter Dick Bosman begins matching pitches with Vida Blue of the A's, Cincinnati's defending National League champions will take the field against Atlanta with Gary Nolan opening for the injury-plagued Reds against Phil Niekro.

At 8:30 p.m., the Dodgers begin play at Houston as Allen, the controversial slugger acquired from St. Louis, slips into his latest role while Bill Singer opens on the mound for Los Angeles and Larry Dierker for the Astros.

Sixteen more teams begin play Tuesday before the world champion Baltimore Orioles and Chicago White Sox become the last teams to take the field on Wednesday, the Orioles opening at home against Washington and the White Sox in a double header at Oakland.

The Tuesday schedule lists nine games. In the American League, Milwaukee will be at Minnesota, Cleveland at Detroit, New York at Boston and Kansas City at California for a night game. In the National League, it'll be St. Louis at Chicago, Montreal at New York, Philadelphia at Pittsburgh and San Francisco at San Diego and Los Angeles at Houston in night games.

Tougher going
Cincinnati, which totally wiped out the opposition in National League West last year, is expected to find it more difficult this season due to the injuries and questionable pitching. While the Reds are attempting to defend their laurels in the NL West, Pittsburgh's Pirates will be doing the same thing in the NL East with a pitching staff bolstered by the addition of Nelson Briles from St. Louis and Bob Johnson from Kansas City.

The Orioles, meanwhile, are strong favorites to repeat in the American League East with their slugging triumvirate of Boog Powell and Brooks and

Boston and Detroit can't be overlooked. The Red Sox have Yastrzemski, baseball's highest salaried player with a three-year, $500,000 contract, and new faces in shortstop Luis Aparicio and catcher Duane Josephson from the Chicago White Sox and reliever Ken Tatum.

Martin Tigers Manager
The Tigers, who traded away McLain, have a new left side of the infield with a third baseman Aurelio Rodriguez and shortstop Ed Brinkman, along with pitcher Joe Coleman, coming from Washington in exchange. They also have a new manager in fiery Billy Martin. Martin is one of only two new managers in the majors, with Dick Williams of the A's the other. Williams will be out to try and push Oakland past the defending champion Minnesota Twins in AL West, but no one is overlooking the California Angels.

The Angels, who finished third last season, have been strengthened by the addition of Conigliaro's bat to go with the one used by AL batting king Alex Johnson.

Perry, Pattin Will Duel in Chilly Minnesota Tuesday

S.T. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS

(AP) — The Minnesota Twins, still without a set starting rotation, launch their drive for a third straight West Division championship in the American League Tuesday against the improved Milwaukee Brewers.

Jim Perry, the 1970 AL Cy Young Award pitcher with a 24-12 record, will hurl for the Twins against Marty Pattin, 14-12, in what could turn out to be a chilled opener.

Metropolitan Stadium ground crews spent last week removing snow and the forecast called for temperatures of between 35 and 40 degrees of the 1:15 p.m. CST opener.

"We won't make a decision until Tuesday," said Bill Robertson, Twins vice president, "But we are proceeding as if there will be a baseball game."

Twins' Manager Bill Rigney appears to have more of a problem. Perry, for the second straight year, starts out as the only consistent starting pitcher. Bert Blyleven, 10-9 as a rock-ie, and left-hander Tommy Hall, 11-6, will begin the season in starting rotation.

The Twins again will field a power-laden batting order built around sluggers Harmon Killebrew and Tony Oliva. Rod Carew, healthy after knee surgery, will open at second base.

The Brewers, who tied Kansas City for fourth place last year, in the best cactus league record.

Speedy Tommy Harper keys the Brewer offense, slugging 31 homers last season, hitting .296 and stealing 38 bases.

Six-Run 5th Sparks Cubs Past Chisox

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP)

Billy Williams' fourth spring home run and a pinch three-run homer by Hal Breen sparked a six-run fifth as the Chicago Cubs defeated the White Sox 9-4 for a series-squaring victory Saturday.

The Cubs batted around, getting six hits-four for extra bases-off loser Tommy John in the fifth.

"The Cubs got to Don Eddy for three more runs in the seventh to avenge the American League's 9-2 win Friday in Tucson.

Rookie outfielder Jose Ortiz put together his third consecutive game with three straight hits as he filled in for ailing Joe Pepitone in center.

The two Chicago rivals will close out their spring exhibition game competition Sunday playing the third and rubber game of their spring set.

Aaron, Cepeda Blast Homers As Braves Win

ATLANTA (AP) — Hank Aaron and Orlando Cepeda belted solo home runs Saturday as the Atlanta Braves trimmed Washington 6-2 in an exhibition baseball game.

Aaron's homer came in the first and Cepeda's in the fifth.

The Braves scored a pair of unearned runs in the third inning and added two more in the fourth on a walk, a double by Jim Nash and a triple by Sonny Jackson.

Funseth Enjoys Happy Birthday By Taking Lead

BY BOB GREEN

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Soft-spoken veteran Rod Funseth charged out of the pack with a six-under-par 65 and took sole control of the top spot in the third round of the $190,000 Greater Greensboro Open Golf Tournament Saturday.

Funseth, playing on his 38th birthday had a 54-hole total of 204, nine-under-par on the 7,034-yard Segefield Country Club golf course.

That put him two strokes ahead of a group of three tied for second at 206—veteran Miller Barber, rookie Brian Allin and Dave Eicheleberger. Allin and Eicheleberger each carded 67s in the cool, cloudy weather while Barber had a 69.

Bob Charles, the New Zealand left-hander who had a 68, and Pete Black, 70, were tied at 207.

Ideal Day
The playing conditions were near ideal, with practically no wind—a welcome relief from the rain and cold that marred Friday's second round.

But the glamor names of the game couldn't make up much ground.

Lee Trevino had a 71 for 210, six strokes back. U.S. Open champion Tony Jacklin of England took a 72 for 211. Billy Casper tuned up for next week's defense of his Masters crown with a 67, but still was far back at 213. South African Gary Player, the defending champion here and winner of the last two tour events, had a 69 for 214.

Barber and Brown, one of the few blacks on the pro tour, shared the lead going into the day's play—and each ran into disaster.

Triple Bogy

Barber held the lead alone at one point, then took a triple bogey seven on the 13th hole. The second leading money winner of the year hit his tee shot into the woods, with the ball coming to rest against a root. He hit the root on his next shot and knocked it out of bounds.

Brown was within one stroke of the streaking Funseth when he came to the 18th—and promptly knocked his tee shot out of bounds and took a double bogey six.

Funseth, a 12-year tour veteran who now lives in San Jose, Calif., scored his lone victory in the 1965 Phoenix Open. He finished second in the Avco Classic last year and won almost $45,000.

He had a remarkable round, including eight birdies and a pair of bogeys.

Slow Start
Funseth started slowly, with pars on the first three holes and a three-putt bogey on the fourth.

Then he made his run, rolling in a 25-foot putt on the fifth and scoring a two-putt birdie four on the sixth, which he reached with a three-wood.

He also two-putted the ninth, another par drive, for a bird, laced a seven-iron within three feet on the 11th and knocked in a 12-footer for a deuce on the 12th.

He reached the par five 14th with a five-iron and two-putted and went nine under par with a 15-foot putt on the next hole.

Kubick Sparks 10-3 Win

Brewers Top Padres

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Secondbaseman Ted Kubick drove in four runs Saturday to lead Milwaukee to a 10-3 exhibition baseball victory over the San Diego Padres.

Kubick hit a two-run home run in the third inning, singled a run in the eighth, and climaxed a four-run rally in the ninth with a sacrifice fly.

The Brewers collected 12 hits off Steve Arlin, Al Severinsen and Gary Ross. Tommy Harper had three of the Milwaukee hits and drove in two runs.

Tommy Dean hit a single and a bases-empty homer for the Padres.

Dan Shows Who's Boss

BY LEE REMMEL

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

ARLINGTON, Tex. — Any lingering doubts that Dan Devine is in complete command of the 1971 Packers has been abruptly dispelled.

Evidence that the tautly-trimmed Irishman is the coach was made clear here Saturday as he assembled his squad on the University of Texas-Arlington practice field for the first time since succeeding Phil Bengtson in mid January.

He first came only minutes after the 82-man contingent was divided into groups for individual instructions by their respective coaches.

Devine shrewdly chose that moment to establish his authority with dramatic effect.

Espying kickers Dale Livingston and Karl Kremser, digging into a bag of footballs along the sidelines, Devine emitted a shrill bellow.

Ultimatum

"Did somebody tell you to kick?" he yelled. "Get your fannies down there where you belong with your unit . . . or get off the field."

Livingston and Kremser departed in haste, quickly melting into a sea of green jerseys at the far end of the field, and the tempo of all concerned increased perceptively from that point forward under the boiling sun.

Another indication of Devine's "no-nonsense approach" appeared a little later when he summoned veteran cornerback, Bob Jeter, to a quiet corner of the gridiron for a heart-to-heart chat.

Conversation With Jeter

They were in earnest conversation for some time, suggesting there was something to discuss other than the balmy 70-degree weather. Devine later dismissed the subject with a sly smile and the observation, "We have mutual friends in Pennsylvania." (Jeter is a Pittsburgh resident).

It was obvious, however, that the Packer headmaster was displeased by Jeter's failure to finish more than one lap of his two-mile running test Saturday morning, and so informed the 33-year old Iowa alumnus.

Devine's positive approach also was strongly manifested in his candid appraisal of the day's work, delivered at an evening press conference.

"We were able to test the players today in a large number of ways that they don't know about," he said. "I was testing them in a lot of ways and they didn't know it."

Discovers "Things"

Asked to elaborate, he added, "I just saw 15 or 20 things out there today . . . I found out things about certain people that you can't tell from a film."

Continuing in this vein, the Packer's dapper leader let it be known — with low-keyed finally — that there will be no room on his team for those who do not share his optimism about the Packers' future.

"There are certain guys on the team who are not willing to buy me," he said. "And some pretty good players too. It's good for me to know this."

I know who they are. If they are not going to be able to buy me, we'll have to do something about it . . . if they don't like me," with tongue obviously in cheek, "I'll help them get another good job."

Fresh Start

This prompted him to interject, "We are starting all new. . . unfortunately, what happened to the Packers last year happens on any team. Some of the older people had explanations — they all had reasons — for why things didn't go right last season. But nobody said he was at fault. I have never seen anyone say he was responsible."

"This is one attitude that has to disappear completely . . . but what has happened in the past has been completely forgotten. I think this camp has cleared the air. We are starting over. From now on, I don't care what happened in the past. We've got a hell of a rebuilding job to do."

Evaluating what he had seen from a personnel standpoint in his first "look," Devine said, "I like John Brockington (the number one draft choice from Ohio State)."

Good Assets

Then, in answer to the inevitable question, he rejoined, "I like everything about him . . . mostly his speed. He listens, he runs fast and has pretty good hands."

Asked how negotiations were proceeding with the 220-pound fullback, Devine said, "We are very close to signing him . . . very close . . ."

Assessing other rookies, he said, "I thought Scott Hunter (the quarterback from Alabama) looked pretty good . . . Virgil Robinson (a potential cornerback from Grambling) looked pretty good too."

Devine also was pleased with the practice performance of the 33-year old Zeke Bratkowski, who was hitting receivers with precision and authority.

Moore to Offense

Devine expressed optimism about the transfer of Rich Moore from the defensive line to offensive tackle. "Rich is a heck of a good kid and he is very coachable . . . I think he is going to help."

Time-Saver

"But the whole day was very beneficial . . . from a coaches point of view, it was invaluable to have the squad broken off into groups, even though it was windy and hard to hear. With everything against us, it was still invaluable. It's just going to save a lot of time in July."

Aldridge Impressed

And the players . . . ? Defensive veteran Lionel Aldridge conceded quietly, "I was impressed . . . I like the way he talks."

Runningback Dave Hampton, for another, was "very impressed . . . very impressed." So much so, he said, that "I am looking forward to coming back in July."

McDaniels, Gilmore Guide East All-Stars Over West

DAYTON, OHIO (AP)

Jim McDaniels of Western Kentucky and Artis Gilmore of Jacksonville, a pair of seven-foot All-Americans, led the East to a 106-104 overtime victory Saturday over the West in the Coaches All-Star basketball game.

McDaniels, who reportedly has signed a $3 million contract with the California Cougars, poured in 29 points, hitting 12 of 17 floor shots and grabbing 10 rebounds.

Gilmore, who also will play in the American Basketball Association next season with the Kentucky Colonels, contributed 24 points and collected a game high 20 rebounds.

Rick Yunkus, Georgia Tech's 6-9 star, sparked the East in the overtime. He put the winners ahead to stay with a basket for a 99-98 lead with 3:06 to play.

Gilmore's tip-in put the East ahead by four points with 1:28 remaining.

Cliff Meely of Colorado hit a goal with 1:13 to play to cut the margin to two in the nationally televised game in the University of Dayton Arena.

Jim Clemons of Ohio State stole a West pass with 10 seconds to go to clinch East's third straight victory in the series. The East leads 6-3.

While McDaniels and Gilmore were providing the East's one-two scoring punch, the West countered with a balanced attack. Mike Newlin of Utah led six double figure scorers for the losers with 18 points.

Newlin's spectacular 18-foot jump shot tied the game 94-91 with one second left in regular play.

KING PIN capers

Jim Kluba, one of the few Fox Cities area bowlers who is a member of the Professional Bowlers Association, has announced the opening of his own pro shop featuring a complete line of items for the bowler.

Kluba's shop is located at 500 Chain Drive, south of the Valley Fair Shopping Center area, and features complete fitting and ball drilling services.

Jim has been a PBA member since last August. He competed in one tournament in St. Louis on the winter tour and plans to enter several of the meets on the summer schedule.

The Reetz Supper Club team has a pretty enviable record going in the Major League at Hahn's Lanes.

Reetz has won six championships and finished second three times in the last nine years. In that span, the squad has posted a record of 524½ victories to 231½ losses.

Chuck Bayer and Bob Schmitz have been regulars with the team through the nine seasons.

Members of the team, currently in first place by one point with three weeks of action remaining, are Larry Techlin, Earl Mentzel, Jim Kluba, Bill Herbst and Dan Mittag.

Bowlers from the Fox Cities fared pretty well in the pro-am portion of the Miller Open which was held in Milwaukee in February. No fewer than 11 area kegglers finished "in the money."

Leading the way was Pat Wojahn, Neenah, who earned $100 for her fifth place finish. Winners of $50 checks included Sharon Hibbard, Appleton; Don Boushele, Oshkosh; Alice Mavroff, Appleton; Robert Watson, Hortonville; Jim Huss, Hortonville; George Hahn, Appleton; Bob Badtke, Appleton; Pete Wildenberg, Kimberly; Don Masterson, Waupaca and Clarence Kositzke, Appleton.

Over 300 young bowlers and their parents are expected for the event, according to Jim Miringoff at Sabre.

The Super Bowl team had a hot night in the Classic League at the 41 Bowl last Thursday by cracking a 3,152 series scratch.

The count was the highest this season in the league and included games of 1,038, 1,040 and 1,074.

Lou Mueller recorded a 169 triplicate in the Veterans League at the 41 Bowl.

Betty Cutler rolled an all-spare game of 180 in the Queen's Classic League at Sabre Lanes.

Woody Coon, bowling in the Monday Nite Fun League at Lakewood Lanes, recently qualified for an ABC Century Club award when he crashed a 269 game. His average is 150 pins.

Personal Report: Things hit a low point last week as the Black Bomb failed to reach the 500 mark. My wife, Barb, even beat me one game in our couples league. It's a little late in the season to order a new supply of Inca juice, but something has to be done about the situation.

Mary Heinecke Retains Crown

Mary Heinecke, of Appleton, has defended successfully her women's foil title in the Wisconsin division-Amateur Fencers League of America.

Miss Heinecke posted a 7-0 record in the competition held at the Milwaukee Area Technical College. Neenah's Audrey Knauer was second with a 5-2 mark.

Valley Tennis Stars to Pace Titan Team

Oshkosh Again Well Stocked for Defense of Title

OSHKOSH — The best word to describe the Oshkosh State University tennis machine in the past six years would be dynasty.

Coach Jim Davies' teams have been mopping up conference foes to the tune of six straight titles, starting in 1965, and the way things look it will be no different this year.

"We've established ourselves as a Midwest tennis power because of those six straight conference championships and we finished in the top 10 in the national tournament those six years," Davies said.

But that's not all. Davies' teams have led District 14 of the NAIA for that 6-year span and have yet to lose a dual meet to a conference team since the title streak started.

"We entered in the Missouri Collegiate tournament for years but it was such a select tournament. We got accepted this season Friday and Saturday. At Memphis State (April 13) we will meet some of the top small southern schools in the nation," Davies added.

The 1971 Titans are loaded with talent from the Fox Valley. Six of the first seven racketmen are Valley products.

The squad has been built around Bob Luedtke, the only senior. The Oshkosh native is the returning singles champ. He is also part of the 1970 championship doubles team. Last year he was named player of the year in District 14 of the NAIA.

Appleton's Leigh Ford, the No. 2 singles player, would be No. 1 on almost any other team that was minus a Luedtke. His credentials are just as impressive — conference singles and doubles champ and a District 14 all-star.

Manitowoc's Gary Hamachek, at No. 3 singles, made his reputation last season in the doubles competition where he teamed up with Luedtke for a conference title and gained a berth on the district all-star team.

The fourth letterman is Appleton's Mark Meadow. Meadow is set up behind Neenah's Brian Koehn, a sophomore from whom Davies is expecting big things.

The only freshman to crack the top seven is Larry Gagnon from Freeport, Ill., who will be No. 6 man. Menasha's Randy Bourree is at No. 7.

3 Added to AL Umpiring Staff

BOSTON (AP) — Joseph E. Cronin, president of the American League, Saturday announced the addition of three umpires to the league staff for the 1971 season that opens Monday in Washington.

The new umpires are Dave Phillips, Bill Deegan and Larry McCoy.

Rockets Set Marks, Sweep Invitational

WAUSAU — Rick Johnson, Don Gullickson, and the Neenah and Rick Peotter, pole vault, 11 mile relay team set new records as the Rockets grabbed six first-place finishes en route to winning the Wausau West Warrior Invitational indoor meet here Saturday afternoon.

The competing schools and their scores were: Neenah 60, Wausau West 49, Green Bay West 39, Wausau East 34, New London 20, and Eau Claire North, 2.

In the two-mile run, Johnson led the field with his record time of 10:29.5, shattering the old mark of 10:34.6. Teammate Gullickson scampered 889 yards in 2:03.6 to obliterate the previous record of 2:06.

Other Neenah harriers to take first place in their events were: Schaller, long jump; and Steve Bruce Alberg, 60-yard high hurdles, 8.3 seconds; Greg Schaller, 800-yard dash, 55 seconds; and Rick Peotter, pole vault, 11 feet, six inches.

The Rockets mile relay team, consisting of Schaller, Nate Carlson, Lyle Pingle, and Karl Huppler set a house record of 3:43.5 seconds en route to a first-place finish. The old mile relay mark was 3:45.2 seconds.

Slorsarek First in 60

New London's Robbie Slorsarek nearly broke an existing record as he ran 60 yards in 6.6 seconds. The record, however, still stands at 6.5 seconds.

Second place finishers from the two area schools were Neenah's Jim Remel, two-mile run; Bob Heidke, 60-yard dash; Randy Wild, 220-yard dash; Dave Johnson, 880-yard run; Schaller, long jump; and Steve Suechung, 60-yard low hurdles.

Sunday Post-Crescent D 5
April 4, 1971

Neenah's Scot Quinn, mile; Gary Zeinert, shot put; New London's Pat Delky, 440-yard dash; and Cal Handschke, 60-yard low hurdles.

Fourth Places

Trackmen taking fourth place included Neenah's David Schaller, mile run; New London's Handschke, 60-yard high hurdles; and Steve Trauger, pole vault.

Those who finished in fifth place were Neenah's Gullickson, high jump; Pete Loux, 880-yard dash; and the Bulldogs' Trauger, 440-yard dash.

In the four-lap relay, the Neenah runners took second, while New London finished fifth.

"Meet the Orioles," Says an Oriole Executive— "Meet Boog Powell" By Phil Jackman

Who knows Boog Powell? On a world championship team called the Baltimore Orioles, the two hitters you keep hearing about are named Robinson. One is named Brooks and the other is named Frank, and they are both good, mighty good reasons why, on the eve of this new season, Baltimore is generally acknowledged to be the best team in baseball.

But who knows a guy named Boog? Enemy pitchers, that's who. And Ted Williams, manager of the Washington Senators and one of the greatest hitters in baseball history, knows Boog Powell. Says Williams: "Boog Powell is the guts of the Baltimore attack . . . as productive a batter as there is in the American league." Denny McLain calls Powell "one of the three best hitters in the league, along with Carl Yastrzemski and Frank Robinson."

The people who put together the American League record books know Boog Powell, too. In the last five years, Boog Powell has averaged 35 homers and 115 runs batted-in, and has batted .300. During this period, he has helped lead the Orioles to three pennants and two World Series Championships.

But what else do we know about John "Boog" Powell other than the fact that he's very large, plays first base for baseball's defending champions and from his work last summer was named the most valuable player in his league?

"What else is there to know?" Powell asks back when the question is put to him. "I'd be better known if I got more publicity, naturally, but I'm not the outgoing type. Besides, I'm on a team with great individual players like Frank and Brooks and all those 20-game winners" (Dave McNally, Jim Palmer and Mike Cueller). "I'm just not controversial, that's all."

When the people who watch Powell play every day start assessing his worth, he doesn't come up short. His manager, Earl Weaver, who isn't the type to put a yardstick alongside his stable of stars, doesn't mince words when it comes to discussing his cleanup hitter. Says Weaver, "When Boog's hot, we're a great team; otherwise, just good."

No wonder when Baltimore beat down the Cincinnati Reds last fall and made off with the world championship in five games, Harry Dalton, club vice president in charge of player personnel, Boog Powell of the Baltimore Orioles is one of those who has risen in baseball quietly.

went around introducing his first baseman as "the Orioles ball club."

What stories come to the Baltimore fans minds when the name Boog Powell is mentioned?

Well, first there's the one about his love for good food, especially strawberry shortcake, and his tendency to put on weight almost while you're watching.

"It used to bother me a little bit," he says now, talking about the days when his weight was a bigger conversation piece in Baltimore than the school budget. "But if you notice, there haven't been any shortcake stories the last few years. It's like I've been telling people right along, I've always been big."

Then there's the tale about how he lost a boodle of bonus money while playing in an amateur tournament the summer he graduated from high school. While the scouts were going around talking in the $50,000-to-$60,000 range, Boog slumped and tapped out one infield hit in 17 trips to the plate. "They were giving $100,000 here and $100,000 there in those days, says Boog. I wanted my $100,000, too. As it turned out, I was happy to get $25."

But there aren't as many Powell stories floating around Baltimore as one would think. For like the swallows that return to Capistrano, Boog makes a bee-line back to his south Florida home as soon as the season ends. "Basically, I'm a stay-at-home type," he admits. "Next to my family (wife Jan, son J. W. and daughter Jennifer), comes fishing, baseball and music. That's all."

Right now, happiness in the off-season is a nice home, a boat, fishing and about three week's worth of banquets. "This was my busiest winter traveling around," Boog says. "I missed being home; but being named the player of the year in Columbus, slugger of the year in Houston and outstanding Oriole and Oriole MV at two Baltimore dinners was worth it."

Although Powell won't be 30 until mid-August and he figures to have several more productive years, he's already thinking about retirement.

"I don't know what I'm going to do," he admits. "I get scared looking at our athletes and how they've been in business. What do I know about restaurants? But I'd love it if I could set up a fishing camp down in Florida."

Boog lost his father immediately after the 1969 World Series, and there are a pair of stories on how the man performs under extreme mental anguish.

Just before the series against the Mets, Powell's dad was rushed to the hospital. He died there a short time later. Unlike the rest of the Orioles (who lost in five games to New York), and in spite of his worrying, he had a good Series.

Last fall, the day before the season playoff was to open in Minnesota, Powell's three-year-old daughter was rushed to the hospital after having a stick jammed in her eye. "She blinked," he said, "and it saved her eye. As it was, the stick went through her eye, and they had to take seven stitches."

With this in mind, he went 11-for-11 with three home runs and 11 runs batted-in during the eight games of the playoff and Series.

Just about the time you go to thinking no one knows Boog, it dawns on you: baseball, fishing, music, no hair, freckles . . . uncomplicated, sensible, no hangups. Fact is, everyone knows Boog Powell. He's just about as well known as the proverbial boy on the door. ♦

NOTES and NOTIONS

If all-out efforts for improvement could be translated into won-lost achievement, the Milwaukee Brewers and the Chicago White Sox would undoubtedly finish as co-champions of the American League's West division this year. This, of course, isn't likely to happen, since neither of these clubs (which are followed closely by Fox Valley fans) has the wherewithal to attain such lofty heights in 1971. If change is a basic ingredient of improvement, no one can accuse the Brewers or the Chisox of failure to try for better things. Not counting the pitcher's position, each club will start the new season with only two players manning the same spots as on opening day in 1970. Milwaukee's holdovers are Jim Hegan, first base; and Danny Walton, left field. The White Sox's same-spot starters are Bill Melton, third base; and Walt Williams, right field. In addition, the Brewers have Tommy Harper back in the starting line-up — but at third rather than second. . . as well as Ted Kubiak, who's been switched from shortstop to second. The Chisox' only other holdover regular is Carlos May, who is now a first baseman rather than an outfielder. So thorough has been White Sox housecleaning, under new management, that only eight members of the current 25-man roster were with the club on opening day of '70. In addition to May, Williams and Melton, they are Tommy John, Joel Horlen, Wilbur Wood, Ed Herrmann and Rich Morales. A surprise survivor of the final cut is pitcher Terry Forster, a 19-year-old southpaw who sparked in a late-season stint with the Appleton Foxes last year. The over-all Brewer shuffle hasn't been quite as extreme as that of the Chisox, but the 12-month turnover has been considerable when the mid-season trades of last year are combined with the off-season transactions.

Getting down to brass tacks . . . Will all of these changes enable Milwaukee and Chicago to crack any of the top three spots in their 6-team division? The odds are clearly against it. Their manpower still seems somewhat shy of that of last year's Big 3 — the Twins, the A's and the Angels.

'Hot Pants Patrol' to Aid Fans

By JAMES V. LAMB
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It's to it. The girls are looking forward to it. So are the fans. Especially the men. The April 10 home opener against Montreal is a sellout. Who's to say whether it's the Phillies, the new Veterans Stadium or the hot pants? Last season the Phillies, expecting to be in Philadelphia's new $45 million stadium, outfitted its players in new uniforms. They also outfitted their female ushers in white uniforms with micro skirts and called them the Fillies.

New Angle
So this year when they finally did get into the new stadium, "we wanted something new, different," said Rosemary Sudders, 27, the chief Fillie, and the only one of the new Hot Pants Patrol who wears a white jacket. There will be 145 usherettes, 36 of them in the maroon hot pants suits and calf-high white vinyl boots. The others will wear the white micro skirts. Either way it's fun. The girls, 18 to 30, are paid $9.50 a game "and get to keep any tips," said Rosemary. Rosemary winked. "We choose the girls on personality, attractiveness and manners," said Rosemary, a tiny blonde with an infectious smile. And figure? "Well, sure. They wouldn't look very good in our uniforms if they were fat," said Rosemary. Rosemary isn't fat. Constant Modeling Rosemary and two other Fillies, Joanne Giannotti, 21, and Elaine Strang, 24, have modeled the hot pants suits almost daily for the past few weeks as var-

ABA Must Compete for Superstars to Force Pro Cage Merger, Says Werblin

By MIKE RECHT
Associated Press Sports Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The man who gave Joe Namath $400,000 to sign and thus started the astronomical bidding war in sports indicates the ceiling might not have been reached at $2 million-plus in pro basketball. "Two million dollars doesn't sound like too much," said Sonny Werblin, the flamboyant former owner of the New York Jets who astounded the sports world only six years ago by signing Namath to a then unheard-of sum in six figures. "I would have given $1 million to get Joe. I would have paid as much as I had to in order to get him." Namath made signing with the American Football League the thing to do. The National Football League could no longer say we didn't have top players. We needed him, the Jets and the league. In hindsight, Joe was grossly underpaid for what he did for the AFL. Werblin thus feels that Artis Gilmore of Jacksonville, the 7-foot-2 center signed by Kentucky of the American Basketball Association for "in excess of $2 million," was well worth the figure, if he does indeed become a superstar in the league. The same holds true with other highly publicized stars lost by the ABA to the established National Basketball Association in recent years. Werblin doled out several million dollars to outbid the NFL for top talent, and although many of those players never made it big, his successes helped pave the way to a merger between the leagues, and he sees the same result in pro basketball. "A merger has to come," he said, "but first the ABA must get parity on the court, regardless of the profit at the moment. Basketball can afford it. No other sport could pay that much except basketball because of the economics of the sport. "If a team can fill its hall it can pay almost anything. They have only 12 players and the home team gets all the receipts. "None of these players are worth that kind of money to the New York Knicks (of the NBA) because they already have the good players and the acceptance. But the other league (ABA) needs them, and must pay for them." "I learned a long time ago as an entrepreneur," he said. "Selling seats to a game is not like selling a can of beans on the shelf. The beans will still be there tomorrow. But if a seat is empty once the game is played, there is no way to fill it the next day and make the same profit. That game is gone forever. "It's the same thing in motion pictures. With a competent actor you can make X number of dollars on a film. But put a star in the same film and you'll gross X dollars-plus. "That's why I don't think Bob Short is wrong in Washington in baseball—when he got Denny McLain. McLain adds 5,000 seats every time he pitches, and that's what Short is striving to do—put people in the park." No Choice He feels the ABA, therefore, had no choice but to pay as much as it has to in order to get the best college players. "Management can't just say 'we have the best.' It has to go out and get the best. I told the people of New York I would get them the best and I did, and the public expressed its confidence in me by buying tickets to Jets' games," Werblin said. However, he had some unkind things to say about both pro basketball leagues that could slow the inevitable merger. "Drafting undergraduates is the most destructive thing they could do," he said the ABA's recent action in its college draft. "We were faced with that in the AFL every time we had a meeting. We wanted to draft undergraduates, but reason and common sense prevailed." Werblin also leveled a blast at Sam Schulman, owner of the Seattle SuperSonics of the NBA, who signed Spencer Haywood although he didn't have the draft rights to him. "It has to be a stupid man who created a situation like that," he said. "He wouldn't have attempted anything like this in football. You don't think they would let him draft Jim Plunkett without the rights to him? He should have been forced to back down, or his franchise should have been taken away." But regardless of the troubles in pro basketball, Werblin thinks the owners should be enjoying themselves now. "Football was more fun when there were two leagues—at least for the owners," he said with a mischievous twinkle. "The creative years are always the fun years."

New York Council Votes to Buy, Alter Yankee Stadium

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York City Council, hoping to prevent the possible departure of the New York Yankees baseball club and New York Giants football team have voted 29-6 to buy and modernize Yankee Stadium for $24 million. The purchase of the 48-year-old park from Rice University and the Knight of Columbus, which holds title to the land, was proposed several weeks ago by Mayor John V. Lindsay. The plan must now be approved by the state legislature in Albany before the city council and board of estimate can act to appropriate the money. The plan calls for the city to refurbish the stadium and expand parking facilities. The Yankees have agreed to remain in New York for at least 30 years if the city buys the park. But the Giants have not agreed to a similar commitment and are expressing interest in the idea of moving to neighboring New Jersey, which is planning to build a sports complex in the Hackensack area. Carol Minkebiga Blasts 600 Set in Kaukauna Carol Minkebiga rolled the first national honor count of her career Friday night, when she slammed a 600 in the Friday Nite Ladies League at Kaukauna's Bowling Bar. A 153 average bowler, Carol included games of 202 and 214 in her total. Her previous best series was a 547.

McGinnis Says He'll Join Pros

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The huge new Indiana University fieldhouse, still under construction, was expected to be known as "the house built for George." The George in question is IU sophomore basketball star George McGinnis. But McGinnis spoiled that probability Saturday by stating flatly that he will skip his last two years of college eligibility to join the professional ranks.

The 6-foot-7 forward became nearly a statewide hero when he cast his lot with the Hoosiers two years ago. The Indianapolis native was part of what was called the greatest freshman group in school history. He was expected to lead the Hoosiers in a bid to win an NCAA championship pennant to hang in the new arena.

Breaks Record

McGinnis was no disappointment his sophomore year as he led Big Ten scorers, broke Rick Mount's Big Ten sophomore scoring record and made first team All-Big Ten.

The team was a big disappointment to Indiana fans, though, finishing fourth in the Big Ten. Head coach Lou Watson resigned under fire from some of the players for allowing McGinnis too much freedom on the court.

McGinnis said the Watson incident had nothing to do with his decision.

McGinnis explained, "I've felt the time has come when I should get in there before the merger between the National Basketball Association and the American Basketball Association comes. The leagues are killing each other."

Town of Center Baseball Meeting Slated Monday

A meeting of the Town of Center Youth Baseball League will be held at 8 p.m. Monday at Pennings' 12 Corners.

The league is for boys 9-12 (with possible openings for 8- and 13-year olds) in the town and the area north of Highway 41. Registration forms are available at the Woodlawn School, Twin Willows School, Mackville St. Edward's school and from league personnel.

Clarence Pennings (Rt. 2, Black Creek) is in charge of 12 Corners registration. For other areas, the representatives are: Mackville, Donald Wenninger (Rt. 2, Appleton) and John Hennessy (Rt. 2, Appleton); Center Valley, Mrs. Peter Melchior (Rt. 2, Black Creek); and Plamann Park, Elmer Geiger and Philip Ziegler (both Rt. 3, Appleton).

Foe Sought By Olivares

Champ Plans No Rematch With Latest Victim

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ruben Olivares of Mexico City, the world bantamweight boxing crown back on his head, began a vacation Saturday and also a search for a suitable opponent later this year.

The 24-year-old Olivares punched out a decisive and unanimous 15-round decision over Chucho Castillo, also of Mexico City, and regained the title he lost to the 26-year-old Chucho last October.

This was the third bout between the little battlers from below the border. All were held in the Forum in suburban Inglewood. Friday's match was witnessed by 18,141 spectators.

Castillo said he'd like to fight Ruben a fourth time. Olivares met the idea with a shrug and his manager, Cuyo Hernandez, observed with another shrug.

"The only time we'll see Castillo again is in the pictures of the fight."

Castillo claims one distinction. He has never been floored by Olivares but has had his opponent on the deck twice—in their first fight and again Friday night.

But the overall result after 44 rounds of boxing: Olivares two decisions and again the champ. Castillo one decision and the ex-champ.

Margaret Court Wins

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — Margaret Court, the top-seeded Australian, whipped Patti Hogan of La Jolla, Calif., in 30 minutes Saturday, 6-2, 6-1, to win the women's singles title, the Natal Open Tennis Tournament.

Seeks Fourth Straight Title

Titan '9' Has Strong Pitching Staff

BY ROD GNERLICH

OSHKOSH — If the Oshkosh State University Titans take conference baseball crown for the fourth consecutive year it will come to the surprise of practically no one — but the going may be tougher this season.

Head Coach Russ Tiedemann who is returning after a year's leave of absence, lost all-conference selections Dave Melum and Rich Schroeder to the pros. Outfielder Tom Madden another all-conference pick, was graduated and the other starting outfielder, Carl Alberti, has played out his eligibility.

So Tiedemann must replace the right side of his infield plus plugging a pair of outfield holes.

"The big question mark is hitting. We can teach a ball-player to play a position but it's difficult to teach a non-hitter to hit," Tiedemann said.

So to solve the problem the Titan mentor plans to move some of his 11 returning lettermen who can play two positions to the gaps that need filling.

All-conference pick Jack Friess will return to lend experience to center field. Dave Bauer who caught most of the games last season will be behind the plate again. With the exception of pitching, the remainder of the holes will be occupied by transplanted players.

Tiedemann's trump card is his pitching staff, which is undoubt-

Yttri

Stoffel

Christman

Ernst

edly the best in the conference. Three-time letterwinner Dave Christman will anchor the staff. The 6-3, 185-pound senior has excellent control and good breaking stuff.

Junior John Stoffel could be a top pro prospect. He's big and strong with the good fast ball. Last year, he led the team in two years as clutch reliever, but he will start some games this season. He will also play some first base. "Duane is such a fine athlete that we just can't settle for using him every five games. He's a fine hitter and first base is the easiest position in the field to play. With his baseball sense it should be no trouble," Tiedemann noted.

Don Eiring, a Fond du Lac product, could enjoy his finest season. He was 5-1 his first season with the Titans and had a 1.67 ERA. Scott Zechel rounds out the squad and is said to be the most improved pitcher on the staff.

Hits Ball Well

Mark Hinske hit the ball so well last season that Tiedemann decided to use the Menasha product as his starting left fielder. Fondy product Brian Felda likewise impressed the coaches with his bat. "We expect Brian to be one of our top hitters. He has a good strong arm because he used to pitch," Tiedemann said.

Tiedemann was counting on soph Tom Adams to fill for Schroeder's key spot at second but Adams had a lump removed from the base of his thumb recently and will be out for some time. The job now falls on the shoulders of Pete Koupal, a freshman.

Hinske will be called on should something happen to Bauer behind the plate. The Titans' other returning catcher, Bob Berglin, was injured early

6 Titan Golfers Are Lettermen

Oshkosh to Bid For Fifth WSUC Title in a Row

OSHKOSH — Last season, Coach Eric Kitzman's Titan golfers surprised the State University Conference by taking the title.

Going into that conference tourney they were 8-6. That title made it four in a row for Kitzman and five in the last six seasons.

This year, he has six lettermen back to help the Titans try for five straight. Four of them are Oshkosh natives.

Jed Phillips led the Titans in season average last year, by shooting 78.6 strokes per round. Ted Donker posted a 79.2 average and Jim Arndt had an 80.2.

Arndt was a big figure in the conference tourney when he finished a surprise second.

Another reason for the Titan title last season was Don Radatz. Radatz overcame a slow start early in the season, shot well during the conference meet then capped his season by winning the Oshkosh City championship last summer.

Jim Bowman, of Oshkosh, lettered last season and carried an 82.1 average. Fond du Lac's Gary Glazer, who sat out a season, is back this year. Blazer lettered in 1969.

Deer Damage Is Assessed At Waupaca

WAUPACA — "Hey, Mom, the deer are eating our tree," a 4-year-old called to his mother last week, from the sun-porch of their home on the Chain O'Lakes.

And, the deer — in deed, four of them — were nibbling away at the family's six-foot mugho pine near the steps.

This is a cry which would have gone out many more times this winter if the residents had seen the deer. Many people in the area are now appraising the damage done this year by hungry deer.

Forester Hugh Hayes has been aware of the problem and his random thoughts on the widespread browsing may be of help to those who are wondering, "What do we do now?"

By Fern Smith

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

"Deer, seemingly, prefer or are attracted to the more exotic, decorative ornamental trees and shrubs," Hayes said. "Prostrate Juniper and Mugho pine seem particularly attractive to the browsing deer."

"Those who feed the deer throughout the winter inadvertently compound their problem by luring deer into a specific area."

"The deer, being browsers by nature, sample the other epicurean delights that people refer to as ornamental and landscaping shrubs."

"Just as men in overcrowded conditions resort to anomalous behavior, so do the deer. Theirs may be manifested in their eating habits which can change drastically. Plants which are little preferred ordinarily, may become severely browsed because of either the pressure of numbers or irrational behavior of the deer under stress conditions."

"The shrub species that lend themselves best to landscaping are also the species most palatable to deer."

Scotch pine in the Waupaca County forest were defoliated and browsed back severely while the jack pine and white pine growing beside them are untouched this winter.

"This year, the deer have done some unprecedented things," Hayes said. "White spruce, which they generally walk past, one of their 'unfavorites,' has been browsed in large patches."

One should not be too hasty in rooting out damaged shrubs and trees, Hayes advises. The fact that it has an established root system will sometimes pull the plant through.

Many severely browsed trees have sufficient foliage under the snow, inaccessible to the deer, to allow them to grow. These trees are very disfigured with the central portion browsed away and the inaccessible lower part and top remaining.

Lopping off the top of a browsed tree destroys the growth form and relegates it to a shrub form. Again, Hayes cautions, there may be buds which will flourish and maintain the growth form.

Particularly hard hit this year were cottage owners who are in close proximity to deer concentrations and prime habitat. Many are absentee land-owners. This allowed the deer uninhibited access to the shrubbery.

You will find that your household insurance does not include coverage for this kind of damage to your trees.

How does one prevent it another year? The forester says there is an effective though expensive deer repellent made by a salt company.

Another expensive "repellent" is one available from zoos, extract of lion. The scent of this natural predator sends the deer scurrying.

But if you have had an opportunity to watch them browse to survive, you may not resent the damage too much.

It's Sewerrealism!

By James Auer

Post-Crescent Sunday Editor

NEENAH — What Art Carney is to the world of television, Frank Vavruska is to the world of graphic art.

Both are "manhole men."

Carney pops out of his sewer each week to add to the laughter on Jackie Gleason's "The Honeymooners."

And Vavruska wanders the streets of Chicago, "with eyes open and head down", in search of manhole covers with patterns distinctive enough to be immortalized as one of his "sewerrealistic" paintings.

All Vavruska carries with him on his sewer-main safaris are a piece of cloth, a few Swiss-made crayons and possibly a can or two of shoe polish.

Armed with these simple properties, the Antigo-born artist is prepared, at a moment's notice, to drop to his knees and begin work on one of the rubbings that have won him recognition on television, at major museums, and in prestigious industrial collections.

A representative assortment of his rubbings — which Vavruska prefers to call "wax paintings" — is on display through April 25 at the Bergstrom Art Center, 165 N. Park Ave.

And there's every likelihood that viewers will come away from this unusual exhibition, "inspired by and adapting the lovely manhole cover into an art form that is unique," with a newfound admiration for the charm and beauty of the humble but serviceable cast-iron discs that are everywhere beneath our feet, unobserved and unappreciated.

Like many of the industrial products that we take for granted in our everyday lives, manhole covers are "basically good designs," Vavruska believes, "excellent in fact when you consider their use by society."

The fact that many of the covers featured in the present show were manufactured in the Twin Cities by the Neenah Foundry Co., on special order for Chicago area customers, adds to the intrinsic interest of the show.

There are, the artist admits, certain drawbacks to the type of work he does. Lugging a manhole cover back to his studio for reproduction is an unwieldy job at best. And doing a rubbing "on location," in a busy street, has its own built-in hazards.

The greatest danger of on-the-spot rubbings comes not from careless motorists, Vavruska explains, "but from small boys who decide to play leapfrog with me."

Nor do all manhole covers qualify for his highly-specialized art.

"I am primarily interested in color and design," he told an interviewer. "I pick only the most interesting manhole covers."

One he has rubbed the image of the cover or grating onto a cloth, Vavruska finishes it off with fine wax colors, then mounts it on a collage background and sprays the entire business with a protective coating.

Examples of Vavruska's "alley art" have been displayed at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and the Art Institute of Chicago, and have been featured in a television special narrated by Edward G. Robinson.

Vavruska's interest in patterned rubbings began in the early 1960s, when he was commissioned to do a mural for the Archeological Museum at Campeche, Mexico.

While researching the mural, he developed an "avid" interest in Mayan archeology, and in 1961 began a series of rubbings from the Mayan carved stone reliefs in the Campeche museum.

In the course of this project he perfected a specialized and highly personal rubbing technique, which he applied to the lowly manhole cover upon his return to the United States.

Far from being monotonous, "sewerrealistic art" can be as varied as the designs of the manhole covers and gratings on which it is based. Some of the patterns are round, others are square and rectangular. The lettering is classical in its configuration, and some of the castings embody stars, bells and other figures.

Ever the poet, Vavruska has given his paintings such evocative names as "In and Out", "Labyrinth", "Shalom", "Flag of Psychedelica" and "Autumn Bell".

There's even a sequence of seven rectangular gratings — one of which incorporates the Neenah Foundry Co. logo — that he calls "Sewer Sonata". Properly arranged, the artist contends,

Rug Weaving Keeps Her 'Out of Mischief'

WAUPACA — Zip-whirr-thump went the two-harness loom and its bird-like, 106-pound operator, Mrs. Lucinda Buton, fashioned a colorful rag rug.

What's so wonderful about that? Coupled with the delight she brings the owners of her 28-by-36-inch fringed rugs, is the sheer industry of this 79-year-old craftsman.

Six days a week you will find her at her loom in the corner of the crafts room at Bethany Home.

It is her delight. "Keeps me out of mischief, gives me time to think, and I like to keep my hands busy," she says with an affable smile.

What she really does is put "lazy folks to shame." She loves to weave rugs, which she has been busy doing almost daily for 15 years or more. "It's a way to work off my nervous energy and keeps me happy," she added.

Her sight is dimming — but she doesn't complain. "When I can't see to do this anymore, I'll make hooked rugs. They are pretty too. My eyesight is failing: I can't read, I listen rather than watch television and it is very hard to see to sew these days."

She started weaving rugs while her husband, Leonard, was still alive. "He sold live bait, and between customer calls at the house, I kept busy at the loom. It keeps me in touch with people and I like that," she added.

There have been days when she turned out three rugs at the loom. "I come down here after breakfast, work until lunch, then again in the afternoon."

She explains how her loom works. The big 18-inch wooden shuttle holds about three yards of cotton materials. It is passed with lightning-fast hands between the warp, which moves along from the reels at the back of the loom.

"With this beater (a device which looks like a long board) the material is compacted," she said. "I wouldn't give you two cents for a rug that isn't tight."

Meanwhile, her feet on the pedals change the position of the warp, alternating to fashion the rug. When the desired length is woven, the warp is tied into three-inch fringes. "Some people like the ends hemmed. I do both," she said.

Lucinda — her friends call her Lula, and she likes that best — has lived at Bethany for nearly two years, and before that she spent some time at St. Joseph's Home, New London.

"It's been fine," she volunteered. "My sons Floyd and Eugene and their wives, and the grandchildren, never forget me — but I dream about the days gone past."

"I loved to drive my car and I didn't want to give that up," she said with a chuckle as she recalled how she learned to drive her first car, a Model T Ford.

"That was a long time ago and many women hadn't learned to drive. It looked like I wouldn't either. We lived on the farm and I was active in Red Cross and many other things. So, I watched my husband drive, noted carefully everything he did.

"One day, I had an errand to run, and Leonard was in the field. I called my neighbor and asked if she would be afraid to ride with me. She said 'No,' so I hailed a man passing by to crank it up for me — there were no self-starters in those days — and away we went. When I got to the destination I had to ask the man there to turn the thing around — but from that day on I drove."

"My husband didn't have much to say when I got home, but driving surely came in handy, many times."

Sounds Like Spring On the Wolf River

BOOM! CRUNCH!

"Hey, look out. Here comes an ice floe--"

Doesn't sound much like fisherman talk, but it is.

Early season on the Wolf River. Sometimes the surroundings are more exciting than the action being offered by the walleyes making their annual junket up the murky waters to spawning grounds.

A few anxious anglers have already launched their crafts and wet a few lines in the channel of the river. They get the jump on others who are waiting for the main ice to leave the river.

Waters this season promise to be high with the abundant snow cover. Many savor this as an omen of an excellent season.

Currents starting above Shawano, traveling through the spawning areas surrounding Shiocton, picking up speed from the Embarrass River at New London and warming in the bayous at Fremont spill into Lake Winnebago and stir the walleyes into action.

Word spreads fast among fishermen and they, too, flock to their favorite spots along the Wolf River. Gil's Landing, Fremont, Partridge, Partridge Crop, Bamboo Bend, Ox Bow, Big Cut, Spoehr's, Guth's. These are some of the popular names of fishing holes sportsmen venture to.

Walleye fishing is unlike any other as many anglers spend all night in their floating shanties.

These photographs by Andrew J. Mueller, retired Post-Crescent chief photographer, hint at this glorious time of the year when Mother Nature shakes the last of winter and fishermen officially welcome a new season.

Nightfall-fishermen come to Gil's Landing.

'See? There are some walleyes in the Wolf.'

A boat in every diamond of Fremont bridge.

'I hope that ice shelf doesn't break loose.'

Mirror, Mirror, No More Is America Fairest One of All

EDITOR'S NOTE—The My Lai massacre: the trial and conviction of Lt. William Calley for his part in the tragedy have touched America's nerve as few other events in its history. The affair has raised questions about a soldier's duty and in Calley's words, the very meaning of war. Here, from a newsman who covered the trial from beginning to end, is a report on the ramifications of that case.

By HARRY ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — In his own way, My Lai Lt. William Calley Jr. forecast the trauma that his trial, conviction and sentence would bring to the land that sent him and two million others to fight in Vietnam.

"My Lai Unique"
"The thing that makes My Lai so unique, it was a small tragedy in a small place," he said. "No one yet has tried to analyze the problems, to my knowledge, that caused not only My Lai, but the war in Vietnam itself. I am hopeful that My Lai will bring the meaning of war to the surface."

The nationwide outpouring of telegrams to President Nixon, the protests by draft boards and veterans groups and the comingling of outrage by hawks and doves—these all show Calley got the nationwide pulse-taking he asks.

The President ordered Calley released from prison and kept under house arrest during appeals of the life sentence Calley received after the jury's finding that he murdered 22 civilians at My Lai.

Deep Questions
But deep and agonizing questions remain to confront and confound the nation. They go beyond Calley. My Lai and the Vietnamese war.

The case has created a problem in the military high command. When can it demand a soldier's obedience to orders? Will, as one colonel put it, "Every combat soldier now call for a lawyer before he goes on a mission?"

Is Calley a hero in a treacherous war thinking first of his troops or a callous murderer who includes babies among enemies to be slaughtered? Will the nation condemn the soldiers who went to fight in Vietnam? Is an American boy's obligation still to do battle for his country, without questioning why and how he should fight?

Has the nation abandoned the principles it expounded only 25 years ago in the Nuremberg and Tokyo war crimes trials? Do we believe that a civilized nation should fight in a civilized way or do we fight the enemy as he does us?

"Not Plead"
"I'm not going to stand here and plead for my life or my freedom," Calley told his jurors, tears running down his reddened cheeks. "But I would like you to ask, or ask you to consider a thousand more lives that are going to be lost in Southeast Asia and thousands more to be imprisoned not only here in the United States but in North Vietnam and in hospitals all over the world as amputees."

It is as if America, focusing its attention on Calley, suddenly asked "murder, mirror, on the wall" and learned that no more is it the fairest one of all.

"This is a moment of truth when we realize that we are not a virtuous nation," says Reinhold Niebuhr, the aged and respected theologian. "I think there is a good deal of evidence that we thought all along we were a redeemer nation. There was a lot of illusion in our national history. Now it's about to be shattered."

Now, says Niebuhr, who grew up with the century, "this country has accustomed itself to all the brutalities of warfare. This whole Vietnam war has been a tragedy for us. It's alienated our youth, it's divided the country, so we're really in a tragic period. I think that perhaps the country feels this."

Dr. Walter Menninger, the only psychiatrist on the President's commission on violence puts it this way: "Our country does what each does as an individual. We try to keep our best self-esteem, our best image. We use a denial of our faults. We convince ourselves we really don't have frailties, that we do irrational things. There is a great protest whenever it comes to light that we've been imperfect. We don't want to acknowledge that maybe we're not the best, that maybe someone else also is good."

"Shame, Shame"
And so the protests. "Shame, shame, shame," said one telegram to Calley's jury. "The injustice rendered to Lt. Calley is unbelievable," said another. "Truman hit many with the atom bomb on Hiroshima," said a third. "Our boys who ever bombed anywhere hit innocent people."

In Calley, for two quite different, but not totally conflicting, reasons, right and left, young and old, seem to have found a rallying point.

Some opponents of the war feel he should not have been there at all and the blame for My Lai ought not to fall on one lieutenant's shoulders. That view gets support from Calley's lawyer, George Latimer. "Who is the pigeon?" he asked. "The lowest officer on the totem pole."

"Stand Behind"
Mrs. James E. Hendrix of Spokane, Wash., starting a group called Organization for Acquittal of Calley, expressed the other viewpoint. "We might not have any business in Vietnam," she said. "But we've got to stand behind the men we've sent there." Her side is enraged by the feeling that Calley is being punished for doing his job. "A lot of people are saying we are really not getting at the issue at all trying Calley," says Dr. Charles Hamilton, a professor of political science at Columbia University. "I think that's what a lot of people are seeing—while there may be a need to explore the issue, it really doesn't make sense trying to convict one man for the evils that many people clearly see go far."

Strange Combination
"It's a strange kind of combination. The antiwar people are saying 'My goodness, this doesn't get at the issue at all. Those people who are pro-war seem to be indicating that this kind of decision can only hurt the effort.'"

Herbert Rainwater, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, speaks for the thousands who bombed Nixon, Calley, Ft. Benning and the Calley jurors with telegrams. "It is a closing of ranks behind the maligned serviceman who was sent to Vietnam, who has offered himself for his country. The American people are not about to turn their backs on him."

From Rainwater's viewpoint, a national guilt complex is coming to the fore. But he sees it not as guilt for the war, but for being in a war that is not being fought for victory.

Scattered Resignations
The same outlook can be seen in the scattered resignations of draft board members—the people whose awesome responsibility is to put young men in position where they may have to give their lives.

"If the blame lies anywhere for what happened at My Lai, it certainly should not rest upon the shoulders of a lowly lieutenant, but should be with our administration that made many My Lai's possible," said Andrew Cherney, an attorney who quit the draft board in Hamilton, Ohio.

In the Pentagon, the Army Information Office fielded 700 telephone calls in one eight-hour period and nearly all protested Calley's conviction. But the officers who answered noticed a strange thread: The majority of the callers did not know the crime of which Calley was convicted. And of those who did, many thought Calley and his men killed civilians when caught in a cross fire.

More Fully
The court-martial was reported more fully than any other trial in recent history. It was front-page news most of the time. The television networks carried it routinely almost daily.

Not one of the soldiers on the ground in My Lai that March 16, 1968, reported receiving enemy fire. Only a few testified that they saw even a single Viet Cong. The weapons that were captured that day numbered only a handful.

Nor were the six combat officers on the jury—five of them one-time commanders in Vietnam—without sympathy for Calley.

"Beyond a Hope"
"I am assured," said juror

Walter D. Kinard, a major who was guilty of the act. "The jury deliberated 80 hours for its verdict and spurned the ultimate sentence of death."

Major Pulse-Taker
One of the country's major pulse-takers, asking not to be identified, said the decision has stirred deep forces. "Calley only becomes a pawn of those forces. You get left and right united. It's interesting you get the professional military in favor of convicting Calley if anything is not a professional military officer. What he did was not professional. In a sense he's really the posse—the power of the community, which is the draftee upon whom you cannot pass professional judgement as you can on a professional officer. If Calley had been a West Pointer, there wouldn't have been the feeling 'There but for the grace of God go I.'"

500 Demonstrate
The night Calley was convicted, some 500 people joined in a ally in Columbus, Ga., near Ft. Benning, to protest. In the group, and among some men demonstrating in front of the Benning stockade, were many young servicemen—but few officers. When they raised their arms in protest their fingers formed the "V" that has been adopted by peace protesters.

In the Pentagon, an Army infantry colonel, a veteran of World War II, Korea and Vietnam says he's worried "that there's a whole generation of young kids who will grow up thinking of My Lai when they hear the U.S. Army mentioned."

And a warrant officer who served two tours in Vietnam: "He got just what he deserved. No operation justifies the killing of kids. How could a two-year-old baby threaten him?"

Rhine in 1945
Some professional officers feel the other way. Retired Army Maj. Gen. Raymond Huff in New Orleans that in a campaign along the Rhine in 1945 "I issued instructions that we would not take prisoners. We just didn't have time to corral 'em, time to disarm 'em and time to transport them to the rear," he said. "We shot everything that moved."

Dr. Hamilton, the Columbia professor, recalled Calley's statement that "when my troops were getting massacred and mauled by an enemy... that nobody in the military ever described as anything other than communism; they didn't give it a race, they didn't give it a sex, they didn't give it an age."

Said Hamilton: "I'm quite convinced he is correct in his understanding of how they interpreted war to him. Which means we've really got to discuss the whole moral fiber of the country and what's happening."

Clearly, the story of My Lai is far from over.

U.S. Space Mapping Urged

By HOWARD BENEDICT AND PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writers
SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — To fill a four-year void in America's manned space flights after 1973, officials here have proposed a four-shot program to send astronauts into orbit to map the United States, study earth resources and fight pollution.

They would use surplus Apollo spacecraft which one official said "are going down the drain anyway."

Dale Myers, NASA associate administrator for manned space flight, emphasized the program is in preliminary stages only and would require additional funding from Congress.

Christ Kraft, the Manned Spacecraft Center's deputy director, said the project would keep the United States in the manned space flight business at a time when he believes the Russians will be very active in the field.

Benefit Mankind
It also would be a project that would directly benefit mankind, he said.

"The two-man crews will fly at a higher inclination than we've ever flown before in earth orbit," Kraft explained. "Using photographic and other sensing equipment developed in the space program, they could accurately map the entire United States, including Alaska... The astronauts also could make earth resources and environmental measurements."

The United States plans to conclude the Apollo moon-landing program with three more missions, one next July and two in 1972. The following year, a two-story preliminary space station called Skylab is to be launched and will be visited by three different three-man crews for periods up to 56 days. These astronauts will conduct medical, engineering and scientific experiments and set guidelines for future long-range flights.

Then NASA faces a gap of at least four years in manned space flight, until manned tests of the space shuttle start in 1977 or 1978.

This reusable shuttle, essentially a rocket plane that will land like an airliner and make 100 or more trips into space, will be used to ferry men and supplies between earth and space stations, place satellites in orbit, repair satellites, and fly individual orbital missions for up to 30 days. The Defense Department also plans extensive military use of the shuttle system for reconnaissance, satellite inspection and other assignments.

Observers feel that during this four-year hiatus, the Soviet Union will wrest the space lead from the United States. In recent years, although it has not matched the Apollo moon landings, the Soviet Union has had an accelerating program, while the U.S. program has been on the decline. The Soviets have vowed to place the first large space station in orbit and many believe the first elements will be in space within two years.

Cut Budget
With more earthly problems demanding attention, Congress has sliced heavily into NASA's budget, dropping it from a high of $5.9 billion in 1966 to approximately $3.3 billion this year.

The result was the elimination of three Apollo moon flights and at least a two-year delay in the shuttle and space station programs.

"When you look at the problem at the end of the Skylab program and the beginning of the shuttle," Kraft said, "it's obvious there is going to be a four- or five-year period when we won't be flying men in space."

Steps in Bird Watching Outlined

BY CLARA HUSSONG

If those of you who are beginning birders have been reading the columns I've written just for you in the past few months, then you should know something about bird watching by this time. You should own a bird book which includes all the birds of your area (I suggested fields books written by one of the following: Peterson, Pough or Robbins), and perhaps you now own a field glass of some kind.

Perhaps you've also followed my advice about watching the birds that come to a feeder. From this study you must have learned that birds not only come in various sizes, colors, but in a variety of body shapes. If you've watched them feed, you couldn't help noticing that some had long, thin bills, some had short, conic bills, and some, like the cardinal and the other grosbeaks, had large, thick bills coming to a fine point.

A few birds have crests, but most do not. Some birds have wing bars and others do not. Look also for dots, streaks or other markings on the breast, and outer tail feathers or the tips of tails which are differently colored from the rest of the tail.

Look for these fine points even in the birds you know well. It will help you in spotting them in new birds as your study continues. Often the difference between two species can be seen only in the absence or presence of one of these minor marks.

You may now be ready for your first field trip. With new birds arriving from the south almost every day, it doesn't make much difference where you go. For city people, parks and cemeteries are as good as a woodland. Or, you may choose a field, a country road bordered by shrubs and trees, or a marsh.

For your first field trip I advise taking along a good birder. Your companion is not there to identify all the birds you may encounter, but to tell you how to bird.

When you get to the marsh, shore, field or other spot where you plan to look for birds, your companion will stop and look the area over. There may be birds on high wires, flying in the air or half hidden in brush or weeds. Watch for any movement or spots of color.

If you see a bird which you'd like to observe at a close range, saunter over to it slowly and quietly. Except for owls, birds' eyes are at the sides of the head. This should tell you to approach it directly from the front, or the back. Make no sudden movements as you walk toward it, and don't go crashing through brush, or you'll scare it away.

One thing you'll learn on your birding trips is that a bird will sit quietly in one spot until you get close enough and raise your glass. Then it will flit away. The flash of the sun on your glasses is what frightens it. Try to stay in the shade.

Try to identify your bird with the help of your bird book. If you can't, your birding companion will tell you what it is, and explain how he arrived at his conclusion. You'll learn something about comparing sizes of birds, noting resemblance to another species which you may know, and other fine points in bird watching.

Maple Sugar Time

MADISON—Sunny spring days have started in some parts of the state signaling the start of the annual maple sap flow, which will continue throughout the state until late April.

The Wisconsin Maple Producers Council will sponsor the "State Maple Festival," May 30 in Aniwa, according to Henry Schroeder, president of the Council.

Last year state maple syrup production reached almost 100,000 gallons to rank third in the nation, according to John Polich, state agriculture department marketing specialist.

"When you realize that 40 to 50 gallons of maple tree sap are required to produce one gallon of maple syrup—those 100,000 gallons represent a lot of sap," said Polich. He said however, that only 15 per cent of the state's maple trees are being tapped.

Wisconsin's annual maple syrup production, coupled with imported syrup, brings an approximate $2.5 million in sales to the state's maple syrup industry.

Wisconsin Gov. Patrick Lucey has declared this week as "Maple Syrup Week". When he made the proclamation Lucey urged citizens "to serve one of Wisconsin's fine foods, maple products, to their families and friends."

Coho Planted At Manitowoc

MADISON—The first 1971 Wisconsin plantings of coho salmon in Lake Michigan tributary waters took place March 15 at Manitowoc, and six more sites for planting in the next few weeks have been selected, the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) said today.

A holding pond which empties into the Little Manitowoc river was stocked with 40,000 yearling salmon. Other sites on the list are on the Little River near Marinette (40,000 fish), the Ahnapee at Algoma (40,000), the Kewaunee at Kewaunee (40,000), the East Twin at Two Rivers (25,000), the Sheboygan at Sheboygan (40,000), and Oak creek in South Milwaukee (40,000).

The yearling coho, all from DNR hatcheries, will remain in the ponds until mid-May. At that time, they will "smolt", beginning their migration into Lake Michigan with the chemistry of their "native" stream indelibly imprinted on their "memory". This will insure that fish surviving to sexual maturity will return to that stream to attempt to spawn.

Next fall, one or two percent of the fish will return as "jacks", precocious or early-maturing males, ready to spawn and die. The majority, however, will remain in the lake until the fall of 1972.

Last fall, "jacks" from 1970 plantings returning to various streams averaged two pounds and 16.5 inches; adults from 1969 plantings averaged 9.5 pounds and 27.5 inches.

Americans Have Strange Ideas About Australia

By GORDON TAIT

SYDNEY, Australia (AP)—Every now and again an Australian comes back from the United States and says much the same as Sydney-sider Kim Berge said:

"There is a great lack of knowledge of Australia in the States. They still think of us in terms of kangaroos and koala bears. A lot of people I met regard us as backward. Even educated adults thought this. One of my teachers was surprised to hear we actually had cities."

Kim, 17, spent a year as a Rotary exchange student at Bozeman Junior High School, Montana.

But Australia does have some of the most modern cities of the world. Two, Sydney and Melbourne, each have more than two million people; on the latest available count only New York, Chicago and Los Angeles in the United States are larger.

Certainly there are kangaroos and koalas—in the city zoos, or nature parks, or in the mountain forests and the inland plains. But you won't find kangaroos hopping down the streets or fleeing before your jet as it comes in to land at Sydney airport.

However, in Sydney you literally can get onto a suburban bus and drive to famed Bondi Beach to join the thousands of girls in mini-bikinis and thousands of men in trunks who sunbake and surf every weekend.

Australia is a big country of 3 million square miles, 12.7 million people, and 15 sheep for every man, woman and child. There are a few aborigines in a couple of suburbs of some cities, but you have to go looking for them. There are only 80,000 in all of Australia.

If you walked down crowded Pitt Street in Sydney or Collins Street in Melbourne during a lunch hour, you would see thousands of young men and thousands of young girls (mostly still favoring tiny mini-skirts), but you would be most unlikely to see an aborigine. You might see a few Asian students, or half a dozen Australian Chinese, some of whom are third generation Australians.

The official figure of non-Europeans who migrated to Australia in the year ended June 30, 1970 is 3,300. Another 6,000 of mixed European and non-European descent were admitted for residence. However this was only a small percentage of the total migrant intake for the year—185,099, half of them British.

So when you come to Australia you will find the people predominantly white, and the chances are the few Asians you see will be students here temporarily and the Negroes will be Americans on leave from Vietnam.

You will find modern cities with buildings up to 50 stories, hotels new and old, supermarkets, parking meters, night clubs, restaurants, and private clubs which in Sydney thrive on legal poker machines of the one-armed bandit type.

It's an affluent society, and Australia is among the top countries of the world with the number of telephones, autos and household appliances on a population basis.

Most of the people live on the coast, with the biggest cities of Sydney and Melbourne in the southeast corner. Smog is coming to these cities, but at present it is not the same menace as in some Northern Hemisphere cities.

In the big Australian cities you can read newspapers that have circulations as high as 600,000 and they will report the same sort of local happenings that you read on the other side of the world—murders, bank holdups, traffic deaths, politics, plenty of sport ...

Inland is the "outback," the vast sheep and cattle plains where ranchers make fortunes in good seasons, and become broke and broken hearted when a drought continues for years. Further inland from the east and relatively close to the coast in the west are the great stony deserts in parts of which vast mineral wealth now is being exploited.

Leading out of the cities are modernized railroads, six-lane highways, expressways, traffic cops, and radar traps. Roads, however, generally come down to two lanes long before they reach the real outback. There are towns in this outback area, but they do not approach the size of the cities through which passes the rural wealth of meat, wool, wheat, and fruit.

Living costs? Australia isn't cheap, and the cost for the tourist is probably much the same as he would pay for the same sort of living at an international hotel in Britain, Bermuda or the United States.

But the ordinary person in Australia earns less than in the United States, pays more for an automobile or refrigerator, less for a house and less for food.

A recent survey showed a man in Melbourne had to work 4 minutes for one pound of white bread (against 7 minutes in New York), 21 minutes for one pound of beef (25 in New York), 18 minutes for a pound of butter (20 in New York), 33 hours for a suit (13 in New York), 8 hours for a pair of shoes (7 in New York), 1,100 hours for a small auto (720 in New York), 130 hours for a TV set (57 in New York).

Recent figures show that living costs in Australia have been rising at a rate of close to 8 per cent a year.

Tourists Discovering Mauritius

By KENNETH L. WHITING

PORT LOUIS, Mauritius (AP)—A trickle of tourists in search of the novel and offbeat have discovered this remote Indian Ocean island.

Mauritius has much to offer jaded jet age travelers who seek something different. For one thing, it's almost certain the Joneses next door haven't been here yet.

There were about 25,000 tourists last year, less than 200 of them from the United States.

The pear-shaped island just north of the Tropic of Capricorn is one-tenth the size of New Jersey. An isolated speck 1,250 miles from Africa, 2,000 miles from Ceylon and more than 3,000 miles from Australia, it is one of several islands formed some 200 million years ago by a submarine volcano.

It was probably visited by both early Arab sailors and Malays. It's shown on some maps from the year 1500 with an Arabic name. The Portuguese checked it out early in the 16th century, named it Cerne (swan), but made no attempt to settle.

The Dutch came in 1598 and left 72 years later. They introduced sugar cane from Java, named the island for Prince Maurice of Nassau and wiped out a species of large flightless pigeon called the dodo bird.

The French arrived in 1715, relabeled the place Isle de France, and used it as a naval base to command the seas through which British merchantmen sailed to and from India.

Britain seized the island in 1810 and restored its Dutch name. Mauritius became independent in March 1968 as the 124th member of the United Nations.

From the air, it looks like a dark green patch of grass studded with brown molehills in the sparkling blue sea. The green is sugar cane and the "molehills" are 25-foot cairns of basalt rock cleared from the cane fields.

Many visitors are at first puzzled and then awed by the massive rock piles. Standing in neat rows amid the sugar cane, they almost seem to be relics from a long-vanished civilization which worshiped boulders. They obviously represent back breaking toil, first by slaves brought from Africa and later by coolie laborers shipped from Asia.

Sugar is the country's only important money maker, grown on 90 per cent of the island's volcanic soil. The government hopes tourism and tea planting will diversify the one crop economy.

The coast virtually is one long and mostly deserted beach fringed by filao trees. An offshore coral reef creates lagoons around most of the island which are ideal for water sports. Skin divers can spearfish or look for coins and other souvenirs in old wooden shipwrecks.

Some of these vessels broke up on the reefs and others were lost during storms. Napoleon's navy won its only battle against Britain near the island. Pirates operated in these waters and, so the locals insist, buried treasure here.

The summer months from October to March are best for deep sea fishing, but seasons don't change much. A record 1,100 pounds Pacific blue marlin was reeled in off Le Morne on the island's southwest tip in 1966.

There are no snakes, no wild animals and no malaria.

Days are warm and mostly sunny along the coast. There are breathtaking landscapes and seascapes and some of the biggest rainbows available anywhere.

The island's pleasures are inexpensive by world resort standards. Mauritius uses a decimal currency based on the rupee which is worth 18 U.S. cents.

Gamblers may enjoy a race track at Port Louis, a national lottery, slot machines in the hotels, a casino at Curepipe and numerous agents for the pools based on British soccer matches.

There are only two international-class hotels. Others are planned.

Mauritius has people the way Old Mother Hubbard had children in that shoe. More than 820,000 crowd the 30 by 40 mile island which is one of the most densely populated areas in the world.

Busiest Airports

The five busiest airports in the world are all within the United States. The American Automobile Association says that upwards of 125 million passengers annually pass through Chicago's O'Hare, New York's JFK and the Los Angeles, Atlanta and San Francisco airports.

Named for 'Thess'

Thessaloniki, the ancient Greek seaport and capital of the Macedonia area of Greece, was named for the sister of all-conquering Alexander the Great. Thessaloniki is connected with Athens by a streamlined highway which runs through the fabled Vale of Tempe and past revered Mt. Olympus.

Built to Last

The oldest public building in the United States is the Palace of the Governors at Santa Fe, N.M. The American Automobile Association says it was built in 1610, and now houses a museum.

Lampreys Still Attack Planted Rainbow Trout

MADISON — The ratio of attacks of the predatory sea lamprey on the rainbow trout planted in increasing numbers in Lake Michigan during recent years remains comparatively high, but apparently is stabilizing.

More than 700 trout from the lake were examined for lamprey marks last year and as usual the attack marking found were most numerous among the larger fish.

Such markings were found on 26 per cent of the fish examined, which was a slight decrease from the ratio a year earlier, the state fish management division reported.

"Although it does not represent a significant decrease of lamprey activity, it is nevertheless encouraging," said Lee Kern of the division in a summary report of the lamprey damage study.

The lamprey is a prolific eel-like creature that migrates from ocean waters and inflicted heavy damage upon commercial fish species in the Great Lakes for many years. Cooperative control efforts, largely through trapping of the lampreys when they move into streams for spawning, continue over a considerable period.

In another study, the division reported that rainbow trout tagging last year indicated that the movement of the fish during the spring spawning season is largely at random and fails to show major directional trends. But some of the specimens travel long distances. One fish tagged near Algoma in the spring was taken in a gill net in Lake Huron seven months later.

In a study of longevity of the rainbow, also made through the study of marked fish, the division confirmed earlier impressions that relatively few of the species live more than four years. Only two of 292 fin clipped fish recovered in 1970 or less than one per cent had been stocked before 1967. But an occasional fish can reach an age of six years, it was found.

To corroborate the conclusion, the division also examined samples of trout recorded in creel census surveys and found that more than four out of five of the fin-clipped fish were released in 1969 or 1970, meaning that they had been in Lake Michigan less than two years.

Firm Protects Young Panfish

DUNDEE — Schools of tiny, darting "panfish" will abound in nearby Long Lake next summer — thanks largely to an "environmental good deed" which preserved the lives of vast numbers of newborn fish inhabiting the lake's serene blue waters.

Last autumn General Telephone Co. of Wisconsin notified the state's Department of Natural Resources of its plans to lay an underwater telephone cable in November across the 400-acre lake, which lies within Kettle Moraine State Forest.

Paul Schultz, state fish biologist, told the telephone people that the disturbance caused by the cable-laying would frighten the schools of skittish young panfish from their protected spawning beds in quiet, shallow coves dotting the shoreline. The terrified fish would flee to the deeper water where they would be devoured by larger species of game fish, he said.

General Telephone of Wisconsin postponed the cable project until late winter to give the panfish time to grow large and strong enough to leave the shelter of their coves. As an additional protective measure, the company also altered the cable route to bypass one of the spawning coves on the western shore.

A crew of workmen laid the new cable across the half-mile-wide lake, which was covered with a 16-inch layer of ice. They used a tractor to stretch a 2,800 foot length of thick, underwater cable from shore to shore.

A pair of powerful tractors designed for digging trenches then bit out an 8-inch-wide slit in the ice across the lake. The cutting was done by a large, steel-toothed chain saw mounted on the rear of each vehicle.

As the slit was being made, the cable — weighted with concrete blocks to drag it to the lake bottom — was shoved into the water by crewmen. Later, the cable was spliced into existing cable routes on both sides of the lake.

The new cable will provide improved service later this year to residents on the lake's eastern shore. It also has the capacity to meet the demands of population growth. The area is served by blue waters.

What's New?

The influence of the salmon and trout fishing in Lake Michigan is more evident than ever along the aisles of Fox Cities sporting goods stores this spring.

You can still get a package of perch hooks, some sinkers and a handful of plastic bobbers for less than a dollar, but these definitely are not the "in" tackle for the 1971 angler.

To be "with it" you have to know about the "747," the various down-riggers, metered monofilament, electronic and

"You'd be surprised what effect that salmon and trout fishing has had on the kind of equipment we have to stock," a third store manager said. "We are getting things that were common only on the west coast before. Now, these guys are after us for the stuff. They have found out a few new tricks for catching these trout and they're really going all out."

By Jim Harp

The "747", for example, is the latest thing in the line of tackle boxes. Compared to ordinary tackle boxes it really is a "jumbo" and has room for just about everything but the kitchen sink. The "747" includes slide-out drawers and a mammoth compartment underneath, ideal for holding all the over-sized lures sonar devices, temperature gauges, oversized silver and fluorescent spoons and on top of it all, one of the necessary pieces of equipment you should have is a landing net almost as large as the top of a poker table.

To get a little first-hand information, I visited a few of the sporting goods centers in the area recently. Shelves are currently being stocked with supplies and the big "rush" is already being felt in some stores.

"It usually takes some warm weather to get the people out and shopping," one store owner said. "It's been different this spring though. Our shipments are running behind time and we have had customers hounding us for two weeks already although the rivers are still locked in ice, the lakes are covered, and the only ones getting fish are ice fishermen."

Another store manager pointed down a long aisle of equipment to where a customer was holding up a pair of waders to check them for size.

"The trout season doesn't open until May 8, but that guy will probably try those waders on four or five times before then," the manager said. "I think people are so fed up with winter, they'll do anything just to think about spring."

and other equipment required for Lake Michigan trolling.

Down-riggers are devices which can be mounted on a boat and permit the lowering of lures to depths of over 100 feet. These are mainly used in lake trout fishing and with the big comeback of lakies in Lake Michigan, it is expected that down-riggers will be a popular item with anglers this season.

Metered monofilament is "the only way to go" if you are without a depth finder, one clerk noted. This line is red every 10 feet so you can readily tell how deep you are fishing by counting off the red areas as line peels out.

The electronic and sonar devices have been coming into their own the last few years and a heavy demand is expected from fishermen this spring and summer. There are various types to suit the needs and pocketbook of every fisherman.

Since fish are known to prefer certain temperature levels, many anglers are equipping themselves with temperature gauges. When lowered into the water, these will give the exact temperature, and a chart lists the preferred degrees for certain types of fish. Others will click off the depth as the gauge is lowered so the angler will know how far down he has to go to reach the right temperature.

Basic fishing items, such as rods and reels also have felt the effect of the Lake Michigan "boom."

"Just look at this rod," a clerk said as he shook a beautiful, long, cork-handled pole that had a price tag of just under $50. "This thing hardly fits in the store when you put the two pieces together. Yet, it's light, strong and just the thing for trolling for those big ones."

Star-drag, level-winding casting reels also are making a big comeback after the market was almost completely dominated by open and closed-face spinning equipment the last few years.

What used to be classed as "muskie-sized" lures are now common on the sport shop counters. They range in everything from spoons to plugs and come in just about every color of the rainbow.

Once you have all the equipment that is necessary you can also find out about the places to go from a new set of booklets being distributed by the Clarkson Map Co. of Kaukauna. Newest publication of the firm is "Coho" and this includes maps and information about places all along Lake Michigan and Lake Superior, with water depths, spots where fish have been stocked, campgrounds and just about any information needed. Launching areas are included along with marinas and charter services.

Clarkson also has a booklet "Trout Waters of Wisconsin" which is a valuable aid for stream anglers and another "Campgrounds of Wisconsin" listing sites available all over the state.

If you're going on a shopping spree in preparation for the coming season, it might be well to purchase one of those huge landing nets first. You will need it anyway to bring those lunkers aboard after you have played the fish out and besides you can load it full of the other equipment you need while you're making your way toward the cash register.

Wolves Welcome, Coyotes Still Outlaws

MARQUETTE, Mich. (AP) — The difference between wolves and coyotes in Michigan's wild Upper Peninsula is that

By Bob Voges

Associated Press Writer

the former, driven almost to extinction by fear of humans, has been invited back, while the latter, having grown accustomed to "civilization" remains an outlaw with a price on its head.

With the exception of a healthy wolf pack on Isle Royale in northwestern Lake Superior, conservationists estimate the number of timber wolves remaining on the mainland at less than two dozen.

That's why the Michigan Department of Natural Resources is sympathetic toward the idea, proposed by a private group, of importing wolves to the Upper Peninsula.

Meanwhile, as wolves are on the wane, coyotes continue to flourish, and last week, a bill to repeal Michigan's last remaining bounty—$15 per male coyote and $20 per female—was voted down in the legislature.

The two canines are much different in temperament, conservationists say, in explaining why one is hunted while the other the subject of protectionist sentiment.

"The wolf is deathly afraid of man," says Dave Arnold of the state natural resources department. "Perhaps it is selective breeding. But when the white man and his gun appeared, wolves started retreating north in Michigan ... Authentic records of North American wolves attacking men are almost unknown and those that exist have almost always involved rabid animals." The coyote, Arnold continues, originally was an animal of the open plains. But the clever coyote learned to adapt to the woodland environment and can put up with people.

Arnold believes coyotes can be found in almost every county in Michigan. Their range even extends southward to Indiana and Illinois.

To rebuild the wolf population, the Huron Mountain Club, taking its name from a mountain range just northwest of here, has proposed to import wolves for stocking on the club's 20,000 acres bordering Lake Superior.

"We're even willing to pay the bill, a club spokesman said, "but we want the blessing of the Department of Natural Resources before going ahead with the project."

The wolves would probably be trapped in Minnesota—the nation's last wolf stronghold outside Alaska—for release in the Huron Mountains. Richard Weltersten, Minnesota game and fish director, said the state has agreed to the idea.

To date, Michigan officials have not taken up the offer, although Arnold says, "We're sympathetic to the idea. The wolf has a definite place in the ecology of the northern wilderness as a magnificent disappearing species and the predator on top of the animal food chain."

SINGLE SHOT

No formal petition was presented, no motion was made from the floor and the discussion didn't last all that long, but there were some rumblings at the recent Conservation Congress Hearing that deserve a little more attention.

The rumblings were in regard to the annual spring walleye spawning run on the Wolf or Fox because not that many fish are taken prior to spawning. This may be very true, but there are aspects of the situation that have nothing to do with bag limits, water temperatures, spawning marshes and high or low water.

Remember back to the days when anxious fishermen scanned the newspaper nightly and listened to the radio throughout the day for the word that the season was under way. Boats were loaded on trailers for weeks in advance, rods were ready and a wash tub full of minnows was kept in the basement for that magic moment when the "Wolf is open."

Workers from the Conservation Department made regular checks of the water temperature in the spawning marshes and when the time was "ripe" the word was sent out that fishing would open at midnight. It didn't matter that it was raining, snowing, cold or blowing, any angler worth his salt found a corner of a bridge to stand on and if not fish, at least be out there to check on the "run."

The first weekend that came after the opening was like a major holiday in communities along the river. Out-of-town and out-of-state fishermen arrived, lured by the excitement of the fact that the early season was open.

Then came the ruling that the Wolf and Fox would be included with the water classed as open to year-around fishing. While it might have been a boon to some anglers, the majority got little benefit from this. All that was accomplished was that the excitement and thrill that goes along with any opening disappeared.

Talk to a fisherman today about going fishing and he'll probably say: "Oh, there's plenty of time. Let's wait until it warms up a little, the fish probably aren't even in the river yet."

One of the arguments mentioned at the Outagamie County hearing was that the fish should not be taken before they spawn because it was felt that there has been a decline in the walleye pike population in the Lake Winnebago chain of waters. Giving the fish a chance to spawn and then opening the season would provide that much more fry for future populations, it was offered.

One ice fishing enthusiast feared that any closing of the season would cut off a lot of opportunities for ice fishing when the weather starts to warm up.

In addition to the Outagamie hearing, the session in Calumet County also heard some requests for the closing of the walleye season.

Perhaps it would not be out of line for some interested club or individual to formulate plans for a petition which could be presented at such meetings and ask for a spring closing on pike. It would not even be necessary to close such lakes as Winnebago and Poygan. Just shut off the taking of walleyes on the Fox and Wolf rivers from the first part of March to such a time as the Department of Natural Resources feels the temperature is right and the fish are spawning. This would probably mean only about a 3 or 4-week layoff from the taking of walleyes, a lot of interest would be renewed and it undoubtedly would be an economic boost for the area. It should be worth a try.

With more than three times as much space on the walls as on the floor of an average room, it makes sense to use the walls for furniture as well as decoration. Designers Harry Schule and John McCarville used Royal System's wall furniture in oiled walnut to display their collection of primitive African artifacts and as a place for books, records, television and hi-fi equipment.

This big picture hangup makes a dramatic backdrop for a contemporary living room, with bold serigraphs from Syroco rising vertically in the stairwell and other prints hung horizontally over the sofa. The limited, signed serigraphs are available ready-framed in aluminum, black or clear plastic.

Here's Dazzle for Your Walls

Did you know that the total wall surface in any room is the largest area of all? When you think about this, you realize how important it is to give careful consideration to what you will do with this surface.

By Carol Hanson

Home Furnishings Editor

First of all, you should remember that it isn't necessary to have an original Picasso or even an original anything — unless it's something you have done yourself — to come up with a smashing look.

Secondly, there are dozens of ideas that you might want to consider. Because of the tremendous advances that have been made in recent years in reproduction techniques, it is possible to own great paintings. Already attractively mounted and framed they are priced so anyone can have them, and use them in quite liberal numbers over a sofa or even floor to ceiling on a blank, unoccupied stretch of wall.

These lovely reproductions can be mixed successfully with other kinds of hang-ups such as three dimensional plaques to give contrast and textural interest. Syroco has added a group of serigraphs — silk screen prints in limited editions — to its line of old master reproductions, modern prints and wall accessories.

Wall decor can be functional, too, if you consider using the new systems that make it possible to hang furniture — chests and cabinets — on the wall. Engineering to support the weight of the furniture and its contents, the Danish-designed Royal System is suspended from vertical wood strips attached to the wall so that the pieces can be moved around for variety and convenience.

In this way, you can have chests of drawers, dressers, desks and open shelves for the bedroom and bookshelves, record and stereo cabinets, speakers and even a bar for the living room and den. The flexibility of the system gives an added decorative bonus in the geometric patterns that can be played with its pieces and the spaces of wall between them. After they are in position, these can be filled with hang-ups such as travel posters, decorative posters or mementoes collected during travels.

That old hang-up, the tapestry, originated as a way to keep draughty castles warmer but you can get the same psychological effect with a needlepoint piece or a rug that you have made yourself. If do-it-yourself isn't your cup of tea, there are small rugs in gay colors and dashing patterns that can be bought to fill the same purpose.

In more personal rooms such as bedrooms or dens, a full wall display of family photographs in simple frames is one of the best hang-up ideas of all instead of keeping them in rarely-opened albums. And in the kitchen, you don't have to hide our shiny pots and pans — you can dangle them from brass pot hooks set into perforated hardboard to make an important addition to the decor.

Toilet Tank Must be Dry for Solid Repair

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q.—In the bathroom on the second floor of our house, the water tank in back of the toilet bowl has developed a very small crack. There is a very tiny leak. We have placed a pail under it and so there is no immediate problem, as it takes about two days to fill the pail. Besides, we have another bathroom on the first floor. Is there some way to repair the tank? Every adhesive and sealant material I have looked at says it should be applied only when the area to be patched is completely dry.

A.—The best way to halt the leak is from the inside of the tank, not the outside. Turn off the water valve leading to the tank. Flush it. This will leave a small quantity of water at the bottom of the tank. This can be removed with a sponge, preferably a fairly large one. When all the water is gone, leave off the tank cover so that the air can get to the bottom of the tank and remove every last vestige of moisture. Using one of the waterproof sealants, spread it on the bottom of the tank in the area of the crack. Use the sealant generously. Wait 24 hours and the tank will be ready for use again.

Q.—Can rubbing alcohol be used instead of denatured alcohol as a thinner for shellac?

A.—No. No. No.

You Can Make a Walk Suit Your Personality

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

There are many nice things about making your own walk. I happen to think the nicest is that you can make it any size, color or shape you please. It can be as individual as you are.

You have five general types of materials available: Brick, concrete, flagstone, blacktop and various types of gravel. Less widely used but very good-looking and practical is wood; slices of tree cross-sections, well preserved against decay.

As for colors, you have near-rainbow possibilities, with all the lime-proof cement colors, plus many hues of gravel and various chips.

So it really comes down to how much work you want to do, and what will look best going from your door to the street, the garage and winding out to your garden.

Easiest is a path of flagstones, where you cut the turf or ground where each "flag" will go. In the lawn, remember to have the stones slightly below level, so the lawn mower can go safely over them. Almost as simple is making flagstones of concrete. Dig down a couple of inches, keeping the sides vertical, to act as the form. Mix up some ready-mix concrete, add some concrete colors if you wish, then simply pour into the small excavations.

A wall of brick, in any simple pattern, can be most attractive and last a long time. While the bricks stay surprisingly well when worked into position in a bed of sand or earth, here's an easy way to anchor them even more firmly;

Place them in the desired pattern in the sand bed. Leave about half an inch between bricks, and perhaps 3/4 inch space between the level of the sand and the surface of the brick. Into this space pour dry Portland cement. Brush off any cement on the top surface of the bricks.

Set your lawn sprinkler to "mist," and let this play over the bricks for a couple of hours. The mist will work the cement down somewhat into the sand, and at the same time start the hardening action. Pretty soon you have your bricks firmly cemented together. No aching back, no heavy mixing of cement, sand and water, no big clean-up afterward.

Even with a motorized mixer (one of our greater blessings) concrete work can get heavy. It doesn't get lighter as you go along, either. So a suggestion: Instead of mixing your own, use bags of ready-mix, where all you add is water. Not as cheap, but saves a lot of work.

To keep a concrete path looking tidy along the edges, you'll need wooden boards (a form) firmly braced in position. They'll remain there until the concrete has hardened. Before putting these boards down, coat the contact sides with old motor oil or grease, so they won't stick to the concrete and make removal difficult.

You can do more than mix lime-proof colors to keep your concrete walks looking somewhat raw. You can set in slate flagstones before the concrete sets up. You can line the edges with decorative tiles, beach stones, shells, round disks of colored glass. (One way: Wear heavy gloves, break beer bottles with hammer until only lower one inch remains. Push jagged edges down into concrete until the bottom is tight on the surface.) I've even seen beautiful impressions of big tropical leaves on a concrete patio.

Another great source of color is gravel, as well as white marble chips. In various parts of the country, you find gravel in light-to-dark grayish blue, red-brown, ochre, nearly black slate, dull graygreen. Excellent stuff for a colorful path.

Oviously, utilitarian paths should be straight and direct, such as from the street and garage. But a curve does add beauty of design, and worth considering around gardens. However, too much meandering may result in new short-cuts being worn on the lawn.

Doesn't bother you? Okay. After all, you're in charge of where your walks will be and what they should look like. That's one of the nice things about them.

Easy Traffic in Modest One-Story Home

BY ANDY LANG
A center hall is sometimes considered wasteful when space is at a premium, but it has been included in this modest house to give the same kind of traffic advantage that is an integral part of more expensive homes.

Traffic circulation is excellent throughout. Not a single room need be crossed to get to another, a layout not too familiar in a one-story house with only 1370 square feet of habitable area. Also, the entrance foyer does more than serve as the starting point for movement to one of the rooms. It creates an excellent first impression, with its decorative wrought iron railings separating it from the sunken living room at the left.

Architect William G. Churgans has given the exterior the same kind of eye appeal. Contributing to the attractiveness of the structure are the low-hipped roof with wide overhangs, the machine-split wood shingled walls, the horizontal-paned windows, a massive chimney and a delightful L-shaped flower-box brick planter leading to the front door.

Excellent decorating possibilities abound in the living room, which has a log-burning, brick-faced fireplace, corner windows and plenty of wall space. Across the foyer from the living room is a full-sized dining room with access to the kitchen.

Women will love the kitchen-dinette, which stretches 17' 6" and has an eye-level oven and a series of cupboards designed to put everything within easy reach. Serving either indoors or out is simple because of sliding glass doors in the dinette section.

Of the three bedrooms, two are at the rear, the master bedroom at the front, has a private stall-shower bathroom and two walk-in closets. The family bathroom, also in the bedroom wing, has a luminous ceiling and a mechanically ventilated exhaust.

There is a full basement for a recreation room, laundry room, workshop, storage space and utilities. It can be finished completely at the time of construction or left as is for possible later separation of areas. It can be reached via an open-rail stairway adjacent to the kitchen.

While the plans for Design S-92 show a one-car garage, it can be dispensed with or expanded to a two-car garage depending on the family's needs, the budget, the size of the lot and the region in which the house is built. In addition to the car entrance, there are two doors in the garage, one from the kitchen and one from the rear.

With its attractive styling and intelligent zoning, this house is likely to foster pleasant living.

Generally pleasant exterior appearance of this three-bedroom, one-story house is enhanced by brickwork in the large chimney and the L-shaped planter that extends around the living room to the front door.

Corner fireplace, with brick from floor to ceiling, is the focal point of the living room to the left of the entrance foyer.

Design S-92 is a one-story house with a living room, dining room, kitchen-dinette, three bedrooms, two bathrooms and a foyer, totaling 1370 square feet of living space. There is a one-car garage and a full basement. The over-all dimensions, including the garage, are 33' by 35' 6".

Cross traffic is conspicuous by its absence in the circulation pattern of this modestly dimensioned layout, with every room directly accessible from the front foyer.

Flamboyant Flowers on Aphelandra

BY KATHERINE B. WALKER

Not really new but still commanding a great deal of notice from most indoor gardeners is Aphelandra squarrosa var. Louisae. This and other varieties of aphelandra are noted as much for the beauty of their foliage as for their flamboyant flower spikes. Leaves are patterned with white, cream or pale yellow along the veins, in broad markings that contrast sharply with the almost black-green leaf surfaces. Flowers, typical of the Acanthus family, arise from prominent bracts; those of the aphelandras are predominantly yellow, while the bracts may be yellow, red or orange.

Aphelandras must have a warm, draft-free, sunless location. However, do provide full, strong light or filtered sunlight, for without it they won't make satisfactory growth. The plants need a humusy soil, and prefer to have it kept slightly moist. Soil that is kept too wet or allowed to go too dry usually results in leaf-drop; if the adverse conditions persist for too long, the plant may not survive. I have had best growth from aphelandras whose pots were kept in a shallow tray lined with wet sphagnum moss, placed where they received sunlight filtered through a malachite window-blind. The wet moss kept the soil constantly and evenly wet, while evaporation added extra moisture to the air immediately surrounding the plants.

Flowers of aphelandras form on terminal growth. Naturally, the more branch tips a plant has, the more places it has for bloom to occur, so pinch your plant as it grows to induce the greatest number of branches and the heaviest possible flowering. Normally, the bracted blossoms are long-lasting on the plant, and will make a lovely display over a long period. However, when the flowering time is over, spent bracts may drop overnight, following which the plant may just sort of sit there, not looking sick but not doing any obvious growing. During this 'sukling' period, I'm especially careful not to overwater my plants, as this seems to encourage leaf-drop, but I keep the humidity as high as possible to compensate for it. In due time, when the plants resume active growth, normal watering is done again.

Drafts, sudden chilling, and overwatering seem to cause most of the problems growers experience with these plants. Do make sure your aphelandra is properly cared for, for a healthy plant is truly handsome, and will flower each year right on schedule.

Q. What should be done with a potted Easter lily after it stops blooming?

A. Keep the foliage growing as long as possible; set the bulb in the outdoor garden as soon as the weather permits digging.

Q. Does the information in your booklet on geraniums apply to plants grown in the east as well as in the west? If not, what adjustments should I make in the care?

A. The booklet on geraniums (to obtain a copy, please write to me, Katherine B. Walker, in care of this paper, and enclose 25 cents plus a self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request for it) is written as a guide to growing these plants in the indoor garden. Since indoor conditions vary little across the country, the advice is applicable no matter where you live.

Q. Can Brand X plant food be used as heavily in the summer as during the winter?

A. Most house plants have a lessening in the vigor of their growth during the winter months, at which time they are seldom able to utilize plant food. If supplemental feeding is required, it will be most beneficial if applied during the periods of most active growth, usually occurring during the summer months.

Katherine B. Walker has written a booklet on the care and culture of GLOXINIAS and other tuberous-rooted members of the Gesneriad Family. For your copy of Gloxinias, write to Mrs. Walker in care of this newspaper, enclosing a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 25 cents in coin to cover printing and handling costs.

Mrs. Walker is always happy to hear from readers, and whenever possible she answers their questions on house plants in her column, but she regrets that because of the vast volume of mail received she cannot reply to individual letters.

Homeowners Concerned By Dry Air in House

BY ANDY LANG

AP Newsfeatures

To the thousands of home owners who are beset with the harmful effects of excessive humidity within their houses, it comes as somewhat of a surprise to discover that thousands of others have the opposite problem—too little humidity.

A recent article discussing the possible solutions to condensation brought a flood of mail from those suffering from a lack of humidity, including one letter from an irate reader who insisted "there is no such thing as too much humidity in the house." Brushing aside the latter inaccuracy, since excessive humidity most definitely exists and adversely affects both humans and houses, let's look into the subject of the lack of sufficient humidity.

First, relative humidity is the expression by percentage of the comparative amount of moisture actually in the air compared to the amount of moisture which air at that temperature could hold. The relative humidity is thus 50 per cent when the air has half as much moisture as it could hold at a certain temperature.

When the humidity is too low, your nose feels dry, static sparks are common, oil paintings check, house plants wilt, food dries out, floorboards creak and furniture joints become unstuck—to mention just some of the damaging results. Just as excessive humidity can make you feel uncomfortable, so can the lack of it. If there is insufficient humidity, you may feel chilly even when the temperature inside the house is above 72 degrees.

It is generally believed that when the inside temperature is at 70, the relative humidity should be 50 per cent for human comfort. When it is at 71, the humidity should be 50 per cent; at 72 degrees, it should be 30 per cent.

To halt the problems caused or aggravated by dry air, it is necessary to add moisture to the air. Since there are so many variables that affect the amount of moisture that must be added, it is virtually impossible to estimate the EXACT moisture needs. A general rule-of-thumb has been developed and is sufficient for most applications. This is a requirement that we add one gallon of water per room per day.

In deciding on the kind and size of humidifier that is needed to add moisture to your home, remember that rule-of-thumb. But take along to your dealer all the facts you can about your house—the number of rooms, the type of layout, whether there are storm windows, the kind of heating system, how many persons in the house, etc. He can help you choose the humidifier that will supply the most moisture you'll ever need, with an automatic humidistat to control the output on particular days.

Don't Overlook Older Proper Roof Homes, Designer Says Can Protect Cottage

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Young house shoppers often overlook good buys in older houses that might be remodeled for a small investment, says interior designer Robert W. Houseman, first prize winner of the S.M. Hexter award to select the interior of the year.

The jury for the decorative fabrics house chose Houseman because of the originality of design, integration of various elements in the interior and use of color in a vacation home he remodeled and furnished in Coral Gables, Fla.

"There are some great buys in older houses," says Houseman. "It is far better to own a house than to sink rent into an apartment year after year. Young people might borrow a down payment from parents or perhaps postpone the expensive honeymoon trip."

Before buying an old house, find out how much it will cost to remodel it. You should think of that sum as part of the purchase price. Houseman spent $6,000 on his Spanish adobe house. One should also have a good idea of what the place will look like when finished. It is worth consulting an architect for a fee so that you will have an over-all plan with the approximate cost.

Legislature Pays Tribute to State's Former Kentuckians

MADISON — The transplanted Kentuckians in Forest County and vicinity have been hailed by the state legislature in a formal resolution with the deference and enthusiasm normally reserved for national ethnic groups and their celebrations.

On the motion of Rep. Joseph Jones of Milwaukee, native of Langlade County and son of a Kentucky emigrant, the legislature has cited the worth of the "Kentucky Day" festivities held during the week at Crandon, county seat of Forest County which has a sizeable population of residents tracing their origins to Kentucky, as does Jones' home county of Langlade.

Jones noted in sending the legislature's congratulatory message to Crandon officials that he is an honorary "Kentucky colonel," by appointment of a former governor of the southern state.

He and other "colonels," said the resolution accepted by the two legislative houses, "are highly pleased when brother Kentuckians band together in the sacred cause of celebrating their heritage."

"Those from Kentucky," the legislative statement went on, "are a unique people."

Do-it-yourselfers might be able to do some of the work.

Here are some Houseman suggestions: ... Restrain yourself. Tearing out things—plumbing, walls, appliances—can be expensive. In the beginning, if money is a factor, do only what you must do, and no more. Houseman tore out tile counter tops and substituted white plastic. He painted kitchen cabinets white and put orange and white wallpaper on the kitchen walls.

... He used plywood on the fireplace wall and changed the look of doors on either side of it with masonite gridded panels set into the upper section of double-hung door frames.

... He had the standard oak floors bleached white. This was accomplished with many bleaches and with white rubbed into the floors to attain a frosty white finish. He furnished the living room in yellow and blue fabric with a mixture of furniture—rattan, tubular steel, antiques—and modern graphics.

... The master bedroom decorating scheme is great for old houses, he says. He used plywood painted white over walls. He added white bamboo shades and white wall-to-wall carpet. The only touch of color is an old-fashioned colorful patch quilt on the white lacquered four-poster bed.

The white adobe house was painted a sandy beige, and the murky brown door black. There is a big lion's head for a door knocker.

The most important point in remodeling is that you shouldn't try to do everything at once.

When you lock up your vacation home, do you get a bad case of jitters? Uneasy about what might happen while you're away?

When the time comes to build or remodel your second home you'll have one less worry if you make sure it has a roof that's both wind and fire resistant. And since it's not always easy to get insurance on cottages in the country, it's doubly wise to provide protection from wind and fire.

To be sure of what's overhead, choose roofing that bears the Underwriters' Laboratories label for both wind and fire resistance. Heavyweight asphalt shingles are an example of UL-labeled roofing that's both safe and durable — designed to last up to 25 years.

Self-sealing heavyweight asphalt shingles, which weigh 200 pounds or more per 100 square feet of roof area, are tested by Underwriters' Laboratories to withstand 60-mile-per-hour winds for two hours without a single tab lifting. Many homes with self-sealing asphalt shingles survived hurricanes Celia and Camille without significant roof damage. Winds in these storms reached 160 miles per hour and more.

This is the sort of security that lends peace of mind when you turn the key on your country cottage.

For extra measure, asphalt shingles come in many colors to make a second home vividly individual or quietly earth-toned to blend with a rustic setting.

Woody's admirers seeking recognition

Ron Jenkins

OKEMAH, Okla. (AP) — On a lonely, wind-swept cemetery outside this small central Oklahoma town, there is written a poignant and symbolic epitaph: "Woody Guthrie—Bound for Glory."

It's not an official monument, just a simple memorial recently placed in the Oklahoma red earth next to the graves of other members of the Guthrie family.

For even in death, Woody Guthrie—generally considered America's greatest balladeer—remains a forgotten son in his native Oklahoma.

The late writer-humanist-singer drifted out of the Oklahoma prairie in the late 1920s as a youth. He spent the bulk of his young adult life wandering from coast to coast across AMERICA — "getting close to the people." He sang and strummed his guitar at country dances, in saloons, in hobo jungles.

In the process, he became a hero of the downtrodden—"I just don't believe in folks being hungry or out of work"—a folk poet of major proportions and a singer and composer of many of America's greatest songs.

He is credited with writing more than 1,000 songs, 400 of which have been recorded in the Library of Congress. And in 1943 he wrote a highly successful book about his life—"Bound for Glory."

But Guthrie never gained personal wealth, and he died in 1967 in a New York hospital after suffering 15 years of Huntington's disease—a disorder which destroys muscle coordination. The same disease killed his mother.

Doesn't end

Such is the saga of Woody Guthrie, but it doesn't end there. Indeed, Guthrie was the subject of a folk music revival in the '50s and '60s when scores of folk groups were recording Guthrie songs such as "This Land Is Your Land," "Greenback Dollar," "Hard Travelin'," "This Train Is Bound for Glory," "So Long, It's Been Good to Know You."

And it still is going on.

Yet, his name never became a household word—not even in Oklahoma where he was born at Okemah in 1912.

Woody's son, Arlo, is probably better known than his father among the general public. Arlo is the slight, 23-year-old writer of "Alice's Restaurant"—the talking antidraft blues record which was made into a movie.

Still, every month, says self-appointed Okemah historian Mrs. Glenn Dill, someone comes into town to seek out information on Guthrie's early life.

"Some of them are hippie types, but they're very nice," said Mrs. Dill.

The Okemah visitors "just want to know all about Woody," she continued, "and I tell them all I know and give them notes and letters I have on the Guthrie family. Why, there was one boy here all the way from Italy."

But there is no marker on the busy interstate which skirts by Okemah to tell visitors that Guthrie was born there. In fact, there has never been any official state recognition of the balladeer.

"There has been no official statement on any form of paper in the state recognizing Woody; there has been no monument, no memorial—he has been pretty much ignored in its effect can be truly "melodic". If it is true—as the philosophers tell us—that there is beauty all around us, beauty which we in our blindness and haste fail to see, then Frank Vavruska deserved credit for having directed our eyes back to the humble objects in which true loveliness lies.

'Eyes Open...Head Down'

"Sewerrealism" is the word coined by Chicago artist Frank Vavruska to describe his wax paintings of man hole covers and gratings—some made on special order by a Neenah firm. Above is a collage of four man hole covers; below, one of seven gratings pictured in his "Sewer Sonata". The paintings are on display at the Bergstrom Art Center.

He may not have found sermons in stones—but he has proved that the artist who keeps his eyes on the stars, and neglects to look at his feet occasionally, is truly missing something.

Canadian Exhibit

CHICAGO — "Forty-ninth Parallels," an exhibition of new Canadian art, will be on view at the Museum of Contemporary Art, 237 E. Ontario St., through May 16.

Included in the exhibition are 37 paintings and works by Iain Baxter, Jack Bush, Jack Chambers, Brian Fisher, Peter Kolisnyk, Les Levine, Kenneth Lochhead, John Meredith, Guido Molinari, Michael Snow, Claude Tossignant and Joyce Wieland, and 13 works by sculptors Karl Beveridge, Robert Murray, David Rabinowitch and Edward Zelenak.

These 16 artists were chosen to represent a valid cross-section of art activity in Canada in the late 1960s.

Brandt is also exhibiting work in the 50th Wisconsin Designer-Craftsman Show at the Fine Arts Galleries of the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and at the "L'Atelier Gallery in Milwaukee in a show entitled "Art of Adornment."

In the latter exhibit Brandt is exhibiting an acrylic choker, forged iron and glass necklace and two gold-plated pendants.

Until recently Brandt was chairman of the art department at WSU-Oshkosh. He resigned last spring so that he could return to full-time teaching and spend more time in the field of his specialization.

WAUPACA — A week-long art and craft show, to be held May 9-14 at the Waupaca Armory on Washington Street, will climax the 1971 Waupaca Fine Arts Festival.

The exhibition will open to the public at 1 p.m. May 9, with awards announced by the judge, Prof. James A. Schinnerer, at 3 p.m. on that day.

The exhibition will be viewed from 7 to 9 p.m. nightly through May 14.

ST. PETER, Minn. — The Jaycees of this city are conducting their first Annual Art Competition with a first prize of $500. The competition is open to all semi-professional and professional artists in the states of Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota and North Dakota.

All paintings will be available for sale during the two-week hanging from Aug. 1 through 14. All works accepted for the St. Peter Art Competition must be original, and must be representational in concept.

Entry forms and complete information may be obtained by writing to Benjamin D. Jakel, co-ordinator, Box 58, St. Peter, Minn. 56082.

Variety Success Keynote in St

BY DAVID F. WAGNER

Post-Crescent Staff Writer

MILWAUKEE — Starting this year, the annual parade of painting and sculpture by state artists will become a biennial affair, alternating years with the designers and craftsmen. If the 1971 exhibit at the Milwaukee Art Center is a reliable yardstick, the two years between shows will seem long, because the quality of 99 works is extremely high.

It isn't a good yardstick, however, it is, in fact, healthy and should be stimulating to the creation of more and better art, because under the new arrangement, an artist will not be able to submit the same types of things over and over. If for no other reason than psychology, he will feel duty bound to present something different, at least, from past entries. He would not want the judges and viewers to think he hasn't "grown" artistically in two whole years.

Implications for the future aside, the present exhibit is like a spring breeze; certainly more refreshing than the chilly opening night weather in late March. The grouping of 99 works by 91 artists was selected from 556 entries by 284 artists. Judges were James T. Demetron, director of the Des Moines Art Center; Phillip Pearlstein, a painter from New York City, and George Segal, a sculptor from North Brunswick, N.J.

Segal and Pearlstein qualify as Famous American Artists. In several cases, they chose pieces influenced by themselves. "Wall Flower," by Robert L. Grilley, Stoughton, a large oil of a bikini-clad young lady, is very like many of Pearlstein's New Realism paintings. Madison's L. E. Moll has an uncharacteristically untitled fiberglass sculpture of a life-size lady in leather jacket and boots, which I instantly called "Hard Chick." It was an obvious selection by Segal. Aside from a few such cases, though, the judges have been objective and have assembled a show which is most notable for its variety.

It runs the gamut, from minimal to optimal, from New Realism to the wildest Abstracts, from fresh ideas to the most worn clichés and, of course, from good to bad. But the good outweighs the bad by a wide margin. At least two-thirds of the pieces are worthy of being called art — even good art. And the unimpressive works help serve as a contrast, complement or counterpoint to their betters.

This is the type of show from which a viewer selects a few favorites and, within days, forgets the rest. I have more good memories from this exhibit than from similar displays in the past.

Some examples: —Exciting use of existing space is demonstrated by "View I," a tape-on-wall commissioned work by Abraham Rothblatt, Madison, who, by pasting thin, gold tape on gallery columns, has created a fascinating sculpture (I guess) which gives the viewer a sense of personal involvement. This work can be done as it is only in this gallery. Nobody in Trenton, N.J., or Boise, Idaho, will see Rothblatt's work as we do.

—One of the most eye-catching works is Thomas G. Gondek's prize-winning lacquered plexiglas sculpture, "Starcraft Study," which overlooks an entire side of the large room. The Milwaukee artist's beautifully-designed phallic-symbol piece would be one of several candidates for my own best-in-show award.

—What often is gimmickry came off beautifully in "Bob," a complicated box of mirrors by Edward C. Harvey, Madison. The viewer looks into a corner of the small box and the view is startling, almost breathtaking.

—Another award-winner (there are only six, "Hospital Painting," an acrylic by Joellen Van Ouwerkerk, Madison, has great human drama and must be termed "strong" in every sense of the word.

—The immense physical achievement of Roland A. Poska's huge acrylic on rag paper is stunning. He calls it "Deckle Edge (Let's Talk About the Weather)."

At the risk of redundancy, I must praise the excellent installation of this exhibit, which, by its very variety, could have been a meaningless hodge-podge. Under the expert guidance of J. Eugene Felsch, the 99 pieces form a flowing, cohesive, extremely attractive unit. Felsch has done this same sort of magic in the past — an excellent example was the superb "Plastic Presence" show — and his importance at the Milwaukee Art Center should not be underestimated.

Some of the pieces in the exhibition were but the untitled oil by Robert C. Witzack have to be termed "optimal" art.

From the standpoint of good and bad art, there were some bums. In sculpture, several contrived works were overrated. Examples are "P Reverse P," made of angle iron, cable and Crosby clamps, by David L. Damkoehler, Greenleaf; "A. E. W.," a plastic and wood piece, by Thomas H. DeSmidt, Milwaukee; "Baroque Formation No. 1," a corner full of dyed netting, by Lawrence V. Harrison, Whitewater, and "Lincoln Wrist Box," a mixed media grouping with little impact, by Jerome C. Krause, Milwaukee.

The combination of painting and three-dimensional work is often weak, and "Through the Eyes of an Earth Sign," in oil, fur and fiberglass, by Richard F. Zunker, Madison, is no exception.

Several pieces really had no business being in the exhibit. Green Bay's B. Manger's vinyl and fur "Hanging Whark" does not strike me as a sculpture.

The system of awarding prizes is good this year. The entire amount of prize money, $2,000 by 13 donors, was bunched together, and six presentations of $500 each were given to the judges' choices. In addition to Gondek's and Ouwerkerk's works mentioned above, the winners were:

—Irene S. Kubota, Oshkosh, for an acrylic, "Talking in the Desert" (pictured in color above). This painting shows a Dada influence which, though it may be the single most distinctive piece in the show, leaves me cold. Not that it's bad; it just isn't my taste.

—John G. Lawler, Eau Claire, for a lacquered steel, rope and wood sculpture, "Gulliver's Gun." Interesting but not important.

—Larry K. Brown, Stevens Point, for an acrylic, "Truck-Street-Sign System." It looks like the back of a semi-trailer. Attractive, but not profound.

—Edward A. Mayer, Athens, Ohio, for his wood and for Sectional." Well-designed and excellent use of materials.

Among my general that Oshkosh was spectacularly, represents Neil Cogbill, Richard Gary R. Steinway. Looking steel forms were done but repeated too. Among the hum Warrington Colecott Disneyland." The Bl colorist gets in some right wing.

In light sculpture, relatively dark area, William Erickson's mirror work, "Go V delightfully dizzying looks into the mirror

UW-M Art Professor At Oshkosh Gallery

OSHKOSH — Robert Burkert, associate professor of art at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, has a one-man show of serigraphs and lithographs through May 15 at Collectors' Gallery North, 705 N. Main St.

Born in Racine, Prof. Burkert received his bachelor and master of science degrees from the University of Wisconsin. He has exhibited widely throughout the United States, and is represented in many important collections.

The gallery is open Tuesday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Friday, from 7 to 9 p.m.

BELOIT — The 14th annual Beloit and Vicinity Art Exhibition will open May 2 at the Wright Art Center on the campus of Beloit College.

Entries for the exhibition will be received April 17 and 18. Cash awards to artists this year will total more than $1,300.

The entry fee is $5. No more than two entries may be submitted by any one artist.

RIPON — Dr. Philip Clarkson, chairman of the department of speech and drama, will head Ripon College's 13th European Art and Architecture summer program, scheduled for July 2-Aug. 30.

The Ripon program is a traveling seminar designed to make history and art come alive and to reveal their meaning in today's world. It entails three weeks of study at Oxford University's Lincoln College followed by five weeks of travel in Greece, Italy, France, Holland and Denmark — immersed in the world of art.

A group of enterprising British educators conceived the program in 1959 believing there are increasing numbers of discriminating students who want more from a visit to Europe than a sight-seeing tour. The result was a summer seminar — study tour, co-sponsored by the British Association for Cultural Exchange and Ripon College.

Four semester hours of credit are given the participants to meet the requirements of study. Fun and free time are not neglected in the schedule. A Ripon professor and an art historian from Oxford travel with each group, which has a quota of 20 students.

Students from other colleges and universities as well as Ripon are eligible for the seminar. Persons interested should contact Dr. Clarkson at Ripon College.

On Broadway this month

NEW YORK (AP) — Broadway first nights during April will be alive with the sound of musicals. Song and dance shows dominate the premiere list, with only one straight drama scheduled.

Following is a guide to all upcoming and current shows, including playhouse addresses should you want to write in advance for tickets. Unless otherwise noted, seats for all performances are available.

Premieres

"Follies," about a couple of ex-showgirls who have a reunion after 30 years of wedded wealth, opens April 4 at the Winter Garden, 1634 Broadway, starring Alexis Smith, Gene Nelson, Dorothy Collins and John McMartin.

"Lolita, My Love," based on the nymphet novel and spotlighting John Neville with Denise Nicholson as his adolescent love, due on the 13th at the Hellinger, 51st Street & Bway.

"70 Girls 70," in which some senior citizens sortie into crime led by Mildred Natwick, Lillian Roth and Gil Lamb, on the 15th at the Broadhurst, 235 W. 44th.

"Frank Merriwell," a salute to the original all-American paperback hero, impersonated by Larry Ellis, on the 20th at the Longacre, 220 W. 48th.

"Metamorphoses," mimedance adaptation of Ovid's love fables, goes into repertory April 22 at the Ambassador, 219 W. 49th, with "Story Theater."

"Johnny Johnson," revival of the Paul Green-Kurt Weill antiwar musical, April 27 at the Edison, 240 W. 47th.

The lone nonmusical entry, Strindberg's "The Dance of Death," is due during the week of April 10 at the Ritz, 225 W. 48th, with Rip Torn and Viveca Lindfors.

Current dramas

"Abelard & Heloise," Atkinson, 256 W. 47th—Keith Michell and Diana Rigg as the great medieval romantics trapped in ecclesiastical rigor.

"All Over," Beck, 302 W. 45th —Edward Albee's just-arrived account of family life, directed by John Gielgud and starring Jessica Tandy, Colleen Dewhurst, George Voskovec.

"An Enemy of the People," Beaumont, 150 W. 65th—The Ibsen classic in praiseworthy revival by the Lincoln Center Repertory with Stephen Elliott and Philip Bosco in key roles. Closes April 18.

"And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little," Morosco, 217 W. 45th—Estelle Parsons, Julie Harris and Nancy Marchand as three sisters thrashing out lifelong animosities.

"A Doll's House" and "Hedda Gabler," Playhouse, 359 W. 48th—Two more Ibsens with Claire Bloom starring in alternating portrayals. Scarce.

"Sleuth," Music Box, 239 W. 45th—Very SRO suspense with Anthony Quayle and Keith Baxter plotting a "perfect crime."

"The Philanthropist," Barrymore, 243 W. 47th—A university professor, played by Alec McCowen, attempts to solve romantic anxieties.

Anthony Quayle

Comedies

"Butterflies Are Free," Booth, 222 W. 45th—Long-run proof that love can be happy though blind, featuring Rosemary Murphy and Kipp Osborne.

"How the Other Half Loves," Royale, 242 W. 45th—Phil Silvers and Sandy Dennis in a just-arrived charade about married couples who swap partners.

"Last of the Red Hot Lovers," O'Neill, 230 W. 49th—James Coco stars in a Neil Simon caper about the middle-aged itch.

"Story Theater," Ambassador —Adult looks in dance and mime about some fables by Aesop and Grimm.

"The Gingerbread Lady," Plymouth, 236 W. 45th—A fading singer, portrayed by Maureen Stapleton, with booze and beau problems.

"The School for Wives," Lyceum, 149 W. 45th—Moliere's brilliant satire expertly revised and acted by a cast headed by Brian Bedford.

Musicals

"Applause," Palace, 1564 Broadway—Lauren Bacall shines as a star embattled with an ambitious upstart. Very scarce.

"Company," Alvin, 250 W. 52d — An astringently cool look at urban marriages, with Larry Kert, Elaine Stritch and Barbara Barrie.

"Fiddler on the Roof," the Broadway, Bway at 53d—Still radiating nostalgic humor in its seventh year with Paul Lipson as the star.

"Hair," Biltmore, 261 W. 47th—The pioneer rock-beat celebration continues playing to near capacity.

"No, No, Nanette," the 46th Street, 226 W.

46th—Smash revival of 1925 capers with Ruby Keeler, Patsy Kelly, Helen Gallagher, Bobby Van and Jack Gilford; very SRO.

"Oh! Calcutta!," Belasco, 111 W. 44th—The notorious and raunchy sexexplicit review.

"Promises, Promises," Shubert, 225 W. 44th—In which an apartment key helps Tony Roberts scale the executive ladder.

"Purlie," ANTA, 245 W. 52d—Lampoon of black-white relations in a small Southern town, starring Cleavon Little and Melba Moore.

"1776," St. James, 246 W. 44th—The nation's Founding Fathers come off their pedestals. Moves April 27 to the Majestic, 247 W. 44th.

"The Me Nobody Knows," Hayes, 210 W. 46th—A touching account of ghetto life as told by school children.

"The Rothschilds," Lunt-Fontanne, 205 W. 46th—The rise of Europe's famous banking family.

"Two by Two," Imperial, 249 W. 45th—Richard Rodgers' tuneal account of Noah and the Flood. Danny Kaye stars. Scarce.

Off-Broadway

Leading attractions include: "Jacques Brel Is Alive & Well & Living in Paris," Village Gate, 160 Bleecker; "Here Are Ladies," Public-Newman, 425 Lafayette; The Dirtiest Show in Town," Astor Place, 434 Lafayette; "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds," New, 154 E. 54th; "The Fantasticks," 181 Sullivan; "The Last Sweet Days of Isaac," Eastside, 334 E. 74th; "The Trial of the Catonsville 9," Good Shepherd-Faith Church, 152 W. 66th; "Waiting for Godot," Sheridan Square, 99 7th Ave; "Man of La Mancha," Eden, 2d Ave. & 12th St.

Quayle clicking

NEW YORK (AP) — "I enjoy working. I hate sitting around doing nothing. I enjoy being really used," says actor Anthony Quayle.

He proves it six evenings and two matinees a week as he takes to the stage of a Broadway theater to star in the hit play "Sleuth."

The amiable, 57-year-old Quayle is onstage almost constantly for the some two hours and 40 minutes the mystery drama runs at each performance. "It's very, very tiring," the bearded, British actor says. "I'm absolutely exhausted at the end of the week. Sunday barely is enough to catch up."

But, he adds with a smile, "I enjoy getting up in the morning, and I enjoy coming home at night."

Those not able to see Quayle on stage have two other choices. They can see him as Col. Brighton in the revival of the movie, "Lawrence of Arabia," a film Quayle regards as "a great movie, but I also ate my heart out because I wasn't playing a better part." Or, they can catch the television series, "The Strange Report," a suspense program in which Quayle plays "a criminologist who is a philosophic sort of a man."

He thinks it "very, very nice" to have a play, a film, and a TV show going at the same time. "It's the way the cards fell and everything is clicking now," he says, but notes it has resulted in "a terrible lot of letters to answer" from his three-media fans.

Making the TV series "was exactly the same as doing movies. Each series segment was simply movie-making at speed," Quayle says. But the difference between appearing in a movie and a play is something else again.

"Acting basically is acting. In both films and theater it's a question of digging and finally finding the truth," Quayle says. The big difference between a movie and a play, he thinks, is "a question of scale. In a movie your audience is as close as I am to a man sitting next to me. Thus, your smallest nuance immediately is picked up by the camera and microphone. Why, in a big closeup your eye can be six feet tall. Therefore, you need a minimal amount of protection in movies."

It's almost the opposite in a play where "the focus in the back have paid good money to see you. But they can't see your face. It's a blur. Your main weapon is your voice and it's got to be able to carry way back in a big theater.

"You also must feel intensely in making a movie, but you don't have to project. The camera comes to you and looks right in your face all the time. In the theater you have to project. It is up to the director of a film to move the camera to show the desired effect. In the theater the actor has to move himself, he does the director's work."

Quayle began his acting career in 1931 playing straight man to a comic on the British music hall circuit. From there he moved into classical acting, finding Shakespeare, where the characters are "impolite, violent, physical," fit him well. "I didn't go much into movies," he says, because "the sort of young man I was was not fashionable."

"After World War II, I was in two movies. I got enough money from them to get married."

NEW YORK (AP) — All over the theater map, big change is the order of the day. Sometimes for better, frequently for worse, cross-country professional endeavor is restlessly sweating out readjustments inevitable after a decade of unparalleled expansion.

Elaborate plans crumble, long-established institutions suspend or vanish in bankruptcy auction, artistic directors take off for somewhere else. Uneasiness about tomorrow is evident even among the most sanguine strivers. Comments gathered in an informal but far-ranging survey point to many problems besides that obvious, biggest concern of all, an imperative need for more money.

"The aim of resident theater has been fading," says one disappointed Texas evangelist of regional effort.

"I don't know whether the audience is getting more sophisticated—or we just think it should be," frets a Washington business manager.

"All we can try to do now is save some of the dream," whispers the survivor of a major California fiasco.

"Regional theater of the past 14 years is dead," an Atlanta manager flatly says in the face of declining private philanthropy.

From the ranks of performers, Theodore Bikel sounds a knell of disenchanted extremism. America, he told a New Orleans club, "is boorishly contemptuous of the theater, its enterprise and its people."

On the other hand, in line with growing federal concern for the health of drama and all the other performing arts, President Richard M. Nixon paused recently to remind a Philadelphia soiree: "This nation has more than wealth and more than power—it has culture."

Wide public interest in theater, dance, opera and music erupted just about 10 years ago. Private foundations digressed from science and education to bestow largesse also on multiple esthetic projects. In the mid-50's, Congress created the National Endowment for the Arts and concomitant agencies. Cities big and little caught edifice fever, erecting or planning marble-and-glass monuments that were expected to become instant replicas of Parnassus.

Trend-noters quickly proclaimed the whole

Cultural explosion— pow or poof?

June Havoc's activities with New Orleans Repertory aren't limited to the excitement of her 60-foot trapeze descent (left), featured in one of the company's productions. Miss Havoc is also artistic leader of the troupe. sequence a "cultural explosion," and prophesied the imminent dawn of at least another Renaissance, if not Periclean Age.

The rosy hyperboles have since given way to the red-ink headaches of reality. A Rockefeller Brothers Fund report identified the explosion as overwhelmingly among amateur performers and enthusiasts.

The public, other researchers found, remained loyal to the Vikings, Dodgers, Knicks and other recreational outlets, continued to spend one-tenth of 1 per cent of family outlay on any sort of live arts performance.

"I don't believe a cultural explosion ever existed," says Eugene Palatsky, business manager of the Pennsylvania Ballet Company. "It's empty, a total lie." Few would dispute the comment.

Caught in a squeeze between soaring costs and a business recession that automatically reduces benevolence, major and small troupes, orchestras, ballet and opera companies see no early solution to their dilemma.

"The arts are living from day to day," asserts Robert Stubbs of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. "This was true before, but more so today."

Tom Fichandler, business boss of Washington's highly regarded Arena Stage theater, concedes that after 20 years, during 17 of which the company got by without outside help, "economics have caught up with us."

While several leading foundations have warned that philanthropy cannot permanently support any particular group, intensifying interest is evident among government and corporation officials over the future of the arts.

Senate hearings have begun on the administration's request that the full $30 million previously authorized for federal help to the arts and humanities be appropriated for the next fiscal year.

This would almost double the $3 million actually allotted—after authorizations totalling $51 million—during the first five years of National Endowment operation.

Least anyone confuse $30 million with munificence, the Business Committee for the Arts, a top-echelon group of bankers and industrialists, points out that the sum pro-rates on a population basis at 15 cents per person and is equal to the cost of one mile of superhighway.

The BCA's purpose is greater corporate support of cultural pursuits.

Two other groups are at work to stimulate government responsibility. The Associated Councils of the Arts, representing state groups, seeks "to assure the arts a higher place in the national list of priorities." Recently formed, the Partnership for the Arts wants National Endowment funding eventually to be $200 million.

That annual amount would be $1 per citizen, comparable to Great Britain's current rate of $1.23, Israel's $1.34, Canada's $1.40, $2 each in Sweden and Austria and West Germany's $2.42.

At the state and municipal budget level, support of performing organizations is sporadic, token or nonexistent. In what may have been a once-only booster injection, New York last year distributed $13 million to beleaguered organizations.

Every one of the arts, however, faces more than money problems. As popular tastes change and new outlets for recreation and diversion develop, attracting and holding audiences becomes more difficult. Ballet alone is growing in popularity, while at the opposite end of the scale, symphony orchestras battle more and more empty seats.

Researchers at the start of the "cultural explosion" reported that only between 2 and 3 per cent of the public ever attended any kind of live performance. The same statistical ratio still prevails despite many tries at broadening the boxoffice base.

The pressures of survival proved too much during the past year for the 53-year-old Pasadena, Calif., Playhouse, the 14-year-old Charles Theater Company at Boston, the highly-praised Itinerant Association of Producing Artists.

Abandoned too have been the Theater of the Living Arts, Philadelphia, and the Loretto-Hilton Theater, St. Louis, an effort at collegiate-civic service.

Other institutions suddenly seeking or having new artistic management thrust upon them include the Seattle Repertory, Cincinnati Playhouse, Minnesota Theater Company at Minneapolis and Milwaukee Repertory.

In switch-about, Allen Fletcher left Seattle to head a new troupe at the University of Michigan created to replace the APA; Ellis Rabb, leader of the APA, joined William Bell's American Conservatory Theater at San Francisco; Michael Langham moved to Minneapolis after waiting for three years to manage the aborted $4.5 million culture center at La Jolla, Calif.

Another large case of cultural frustration occurred at Ithaca, N.Y., where fired by the success and luster of the Stratford, Ont., Festival, enthusiasts tried to raise $5.5 million for a theater center headed by Alan Schneider, one of Broadway's busiest staggers. The fund drive bogged down, Schneider resigned, but the community did get a new yacht marine.

"We were overtaken by history," says Mrs. Louis Herman, one of the sponsors who feels the project started too late in the cultural craze.

The extreme difficulty of sparking widespread playgoing interest was underlined by the Educational Theater Laboratory project set up with $6 million of federal funds between 1957 and 1969 in Providence, R.I., New Orleans and Los Angeles.

Although the final report rated the venture a success in its primary purpose of bringing live theater to thousands of school students, there was little evidence of increased drama enthusiasm in the adult community.

One spinoff of that project, the New Orleans Repertory, continues a hand-to-mouth struggle for survival.

"In this city," Muriel Bultman Francis, board chairman, said during one of the recurrent fund crises, "it looks like you've got to bleed to death in the street before anybody will notice."

Many of the 29 professional troupes in 13 states that are receiving some current National Endowment aid are, like New Orleans, trying to trim back operating budgets. Others, like the Atlanta, Ga., Repertory that has been through intense distress, curtail length of seasons, opt for shows with smaller casts.

Among companies that now seem to have achieved the greatest measure of artistic and/or financial stability are Washington's Arena Stage, Houston's Alley Theater, Actors Theater of Louisville, Ashland (Ore.) Shakespearean Festival, the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles, and getting particular critical praise, two Connecticut groups, the Hartford Stage Company and Long Wharf of New Haven.

Two major showcases for all the performing arts are yet to open. At Birmingham, Ala., the

Columnist Gardner raps with Marlene Dietrich

By Gardner

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — Your first impression when the slinky sex symbol oozes onstage at the Playboy-Plaza's Penthouse Theater is that you're watching the rerun of a late-late movie. For the 67-something-year-old star looks almost as youthful, vibrant, glamorous and untouchable as the first time you saw her from the edge of a balcony seat in your neighborhood movie theater.

Close up, the analogy has even more validity. For face-to-face, in the glare of raw dressing-room bulbs, Miss Dietrich loses even more years than in the shadow and substance of stage lighting. Her charisma is overwhelming, a living, communicable phenomenon.

I asked if she, as a sex symbol in more than two dozen films, could define the word glamor. "There is no description for it. I think," she thought, "it has something to do with authority. You can't say it has something to do with beauty because the image of beauty changes year by year and what is beautiful now wasn't beautiful three years ago.

"Glamor has never been identified with anything but names. Even in Webster's you can't find a definition of it." (Our 1971 American Heritage dictionary defines glamor as "compelling charm, romance, and excitement; especially, such qualities when delusively alluring.")

How does Miss Dietrich feel about today's pornography and sex in movies?

"I have never seen one of those films because I don't like that. And I think it will pass. And I don't think it's very pretty. It is entirely unnecessary."

Marlene Dietrich in two poses, by Fred A. Schmidt

About Lloyds of London insuring her legs for $1,000,000.

A shake of her head, a throaty laugh, preceded her denial. "That's not true. It was all publicity. I never had my legs insured. And as long as I didn't have to do anything and I didn't know the country, I didn't object to anything. If they wanted me to say that, I felt, let them say it."

Fact or fantasy?

Your audition for Josef von Sternberg's movie, "Blue Angel." Is the way you tell it onstage at the Playboy-Plaza a fact or a fantasy?

"I was serious about that. I was told to bring a sexy song to the audition. And since I had only one song, I sang 'You're the Cream in My Coffee.' And I still got the part. But you know it wasn't because of the song. Certainly not."

The way you looked and walked and talked is what sold you, right? Who routinized your act for you?

"Nobody," Marlene responded, "but Burt Bacharach did all the orchestrations. And through the years I've added songs and found new ones in all the countries that I've visited. So I bring back songs from Israel, Australia, South America, everywhere I go."

Burt's dad claims that all the years his son accompanied and conducted for you, you did his laundry. Was he joking?

"No. It is so. I did all the laundry and I used to dry his dinner jacket in the boiler room in theaters in Scandinavia between shows. I washed all his socks, too. And his shirts. Because in those days Burt didn't have many shirts, so we had to wash them for the next show."

Our youngsters have begun to idolize the Jack Bennys, W. C. Fieldses, Humphrey Bogarts, Ruby Keelers, Mae Wests. Even Life magazine recently devoted half an issue to nostalgia. Would you, when Lauren Bacall goes on the road with "Applause" in June, like to step into her role?

"No, dear. I don't want to do a show now. I'm very happy with what I'm doing. I haven't seen her show. I just came from Paris and went to Los Angeles. I was in New York only long enough to see 'Home' and 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and then I flew to Miami. I also want to see Ruby Keeler in 'No, No, Nanette.' I think it's particularly wonderful for her because she didn't work for so many years. I never stopped working. So for me it wasn't anything like coming back — I just never stopped."

Joan Crawford, another famous grandma, was quoted as saying, "Call me anything — but don't call me Grandmother." You feel that way?

"Well, I think it's just a silly thing to do because girls marry so very early. If you have sons, then it's different — then you become a grandmother later. If you have girls, you can become a grandmother at 36 — so what's so terrific about it?"

That beautiful satiny skin of yours. You're a walking commercial for all those beauty preparations you see on TV.

No more farewells

"I'm afraid I'm not. I don't say that I wouldn't look better if I put all that stuff on my face, but I just haven't got the patience. I use lots of soap and water, that's all."

You see quite a bit of our friend, Maurice Chevalier, in Paris. Is he really, genuinely serious about retiring permanently?

"Definitely. He told me recently in Paris that he would never make another farewell appearance. He said he was through with all that. And I understand that very well. He worked a lot for a long time. He has enough money. He doesn't have to work. If you have the money to live quietly, I think that is a great inducement not to work."

Since we're taping this for NBC's Monitor, do you recall when you did a series of programs for that popular radio feature?

"Yes. I did an 'Advice to the Lovelorn' thing. I answered every letter myself and I spoke every Saturday. I think, on Monitor. I did all the work myself. I had no help at all and I loved that show. I would love to do it again. But radio is not what it used to be. I love radio because it leaves your imagination open. You can imagine the people. Whereas in television you have to take it the way it's shown to you. That's why I don't like television."

The knocks on the star's dressing-room door began to thump out a coded message. Time to do her second show. We exchanged goodnights, embraced, held hands for a moment or two. Then Marlene bussed me on both cheeks. I'm not as young or as talented or as attracted as Burt Bacharach. Never was. But I wouldn't trade those two kisses for all the laundry Burt had washed by that living legend called Miss Marlene Dietrich. I often wondered what she meant when she sang out "See What the Boys in the Back Room Will Have." Now I know.

Oklahoma," says Guy W. Logsdon, director of the Tulsa University Libraries.

Logsdon believes Oklahoma recognition of Guthrie will come in time. He pointed out that Guthrie left Oklahoma in his early teens and that his unconventional lifestyle and outspoken ways offended some people. "He has been called everything but a conservative."

Logsdon notes that Guthrie has been branded a Socialist (although his city-clerk father published anti-Socialist pamphlets in Okemah), a radical (which he admittedly was), and even a Communist ("by people who did not know better").

"Actually he never adhered to any doctrine, but was sympathetic with anything that improved human life," says Logsdon, who is writing a book on Guthrie's Oklahoma connections. He says he wants to "set a cultural basis for Guthrie as an Oklahoman."

There were moves afoot a few years back at Okemah to recognize their most famous native. A memorial folk festival and a children's wing at the Okemah Library in Guthrie's name were contemplated. But neither proposal ever materialized.

Logsdon thinks a memorial festival would succeed in attracting a huge audience and some of the nation's top folk and blues singers, "if it was done not to make money for a promoter and was a true memorial for Woody." He likes the idea of a children's wing at the Okemah Library.

One moment

There is at least one monument for Guthrie—way up in the Pacific Northwest. The "Woody Guthrie Substation" was established a few years back by the Department of Interior as a salute to Guthrie for the more than 26 ballads he wrote about the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams on the Columbia River. Guthrie was working for Interior at the time. But it is at Okemah where Guthrie had "his fondest memories," says his sister, Mrs. Hulet Edgmon of Seminole, Okla.

"Way down yonder in the Indian nation Rode my pony on the reservation in those Oklahoma hills where I was born," goes a Guthrie song. And it was Guthrie's "Dust Bowl Ballads," recorded with the aid of Alan Lomax, that helped make him famous and sealed friendships with such folk singers as Cisco Houston and Will Geer. It was Houston who took Guthrie to New York where his Oklahoma songs charmed the big city audiences.

Guthrie was close to the Oklahoma wasteland before the Depression, moving to Pampa, Tex., in the windy Texas Panhandle near the Oklahoma border during the '20s.

Tragedy followed the Guthrie family from Okemah, where one of Woody's sisters died in a fire, to Pampa, where his mother died of Huntington's. Fire was to later claim a 4-year-old daughter of Guthrie's in Brooklyn, N.Y.

But Guthrie never let malady affect his music. "I'm proud of the fact that Woody's songs were happy, never depressing," says Mrs. Edgmon.

As Guthrie once put it, "I hate a song that makes you feel like you're no good. I am out to fight those kind of songs to my very last breath of air and my last drop of blood. I am out to sing the songs that make you take pride in yourself and in your work."

Guthrie's widow, Margery, serves as executive secretary of the Committee to Combat Huntington's Disease, headquartered in New York. She is donating the money that comes in from Guthrie's songs and writings back into the committee for research, said Mrs. Edgmon.

One more time, let's hear it for 'Show'

Gerald Rothberg of 'Show'

NEW YORK (AP) — After 10 years and $10 million Huntington Hartford is making his third attempt to make a go of "Show" magazine.

The old "Show" dabbled in all the arts: theater, music, dance and films. A great coffee table item, it had snob appeal and featured lavish photographs printed on the finest quality paper.

"Now we're primarily a film magazine with a peripheral interest in the other arts," says Hartford, one of the heirs to the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co.—the supermarket chain—fortunes. The newest "Show" made its newsstand debut with the March issue.

"My own criticism of the magazine before is that it was just too beautiful. It was hard to say who the audience was or what the purpose of the magazine was," he explained away his two previous abortive attempts during an interview.

Hartford maintains the climate for a good film magazine didn't really exist until the last five years. "The film is now an art form and the major emerging medium of communications. Young people today are in touch with films," he says.

One of the first changes Hartford made in the magazine this time was to bring aboard a co-publisher—Gerald Rothberg, who has published a rock 'n' roll magazine, "Circus," for five years.

Their first step was to slash production costs in half to about $45,000 per issue. They cut the magazine down to a smaller size with less gloss, a trend with many magazines today because of the cheaper costs.

Hartford wants more controversy this time. The emphasis of the magazine, he says, will be on current films and current film stars.

The new "Show" sells for 75 cents. Rothberg says "Show" has a subscription list of 85,000 and newsstand sales of 75,000. Eventually, Rothberg says, it is hoped to put out 350,000 copies for newsstand sales and retain about 75,000 subscriptions.

The original "Show" was published in New York between 1961 and 1964. The magazine was a monthly selling for a dollar with a subscription emphasis and a total circulation of about 140,000 copies.

Hartford tried again in 1970. He brought the first issue out in January from New York as a monthly, selling for a dollar with a circulation of about 130,000 copies.

Then he switched offices to the West Coast in June publishing the magazine as a 50-cents biweekly. In September he decided to suspend publication and come back to New York for another go-around.

"I would have given up a long time ago if I hadn't felt there definitely is a place in America for a quality motion picture magazine," Hartford says.

At present, Rothberg notes, the only magazines covering the films are sensational fan magazines or small specialized foreign publications for film buffs.

"I won't feel all the money I've invested is lost unless the magazine folds completely," says Hartford of the $10 million he says he's spent so far.

George battling it out on charts with John, Paul LONDON (AP) — Three of the squabbling Beatles are fighting for supremacy in the British pop records charts.

George Harrison, youngest and quietest of the Beatles, topped the charts for seven weeks with his pop hymn, "My Sweet Lord." World sales now exceed three million.

Recently Harrison was ousted from top spot by fellow Beatle Paul McCartney, whose "Another Day" was written with his American wife Linda Eastman, Paul says. Meanwhile John Lennon and the Plastic Ono Band have clock into the charts with "Power to the People."

Harrison was always in the shadow of the gifted Lennon and McCartney, the song-writing team that set a new style. Now he has become an international star in his own right.

He still tops the lucrative long-play records charts with his triple-record album, "All Things Must Pass." It has sold more than two million copies throughout the world.

For the past two months alone, Harrison's earnings as a solo artist total $2.4 million.

Under his contract the money is divided five ways, so that Harrison gets only a fifth. But meanwhile of course he gets a similar rakeoff from the other Beatles' individual earnings.

The Beatles' musical links were broken a long time ago in arguments involving jealousy and pride. Their financial links still hold, but that could change. McCartney, trying to dissolve their financial partnership, won the first round of the battle in court a few days ago, but a final ruling will take some time.

Some in-the-knows predict Harrison will wind up as the most renowned and significant Beatle of them all.

"The important thing is to stretch yourself, see what you can do," he says. He used to have trouble with lyrics.

"The beautiful words didn't come easily," he recalled to a friend.

To help with the words, he bought a Roget's Thesaurus, a kind of dictionary with related words.

When the Beatles' musical breakup came, all four went their separate ways. Lennon and his Japanese wife Yoko Ono made recordings. So did McCartney. Ringo Starr developed his interest in making films, and also made a country and Western Album in Nashville, Tenn.

Harrison went quietly alone with his own multiple talents as songwriter, guitarist, vocalist and record producer. He wrote song after song, and the words seem to come more easily now.

There's a religious flavor about his "All Things Must Pass" album. Harrison was born into a Roman Catholic family, but in his teens decided he couldn't accept "organized Christianity." In recent years, however, he has become deeply interested in religion, from Oriental mysticism to Christianity.

"All I know is that, like Socrates, the more I know, the less I know, he says. "I'm secure, not just with money, but in knowing myself, having a good belief in what people call God."

As for the money, the tax man will devour a huge but as yet undetermined bite of Harrison's current earnings.

"It's really illegal to make money in Britain," he will tell you. "If my taxes were cut, I'd do four times as much work."

Harrison is married to Patti Boyd, a former model, who is 26 today. They live a quiet life and are seldom seen in the nightspots.

One happy fellow

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Charley Pride, the pride of Sledge, Miss., is one happy fellow. He's doing a different type of personal appearance for a short time at a baseball training camp in Arizona.

Pride, one of the greats in country music, not too long ago dreamed of being one of the greats on the baseball field.

So, at the invitation of Milwaukee Brewers' baseball Manager Dave Bristol, Pride is attending spring training with the team.

Pride, a one-time minor leaguer, insists the trip is "not altogether a lark."

The popular black entertainer, whose every vocal outing spells instant hit on the country charts, still believes he's pretty good as a pitcher-outfielder.

The Brewers' training camp isn't the first spring camp tryout for Pride, 33 on March 8. But, it is under much different circumstances from those which surrounded his other visits.

"I've been to spring training many times," he says, explaining that it was in a baseball park in Montana where he got his first shot at singing professionally.

One of those springs, in the early 1950s, Pride traveled by bus to Florida where he tried to get a uniform and a workout with the New York Mets. It took him days to get there, but his stay lasted about half an hour.

"We ain't running no tryout camp," was the terse response from Casey Stengel, then manager of the Mets.

On another occasion Pride trained with the old Los Angeles Angels, "but I tried to throw too much, too fast, and too soon.

"My arm grew weaker and weaker and they finally told me they didn't think I had a major league arm," he recalls. Pride says he's never been satisfied with that answer.

After a number of seasons in the Negro American League, Pride got a spot in the Pioneer League as a member of a Montana club. It was during that brief stay in the Pioneer League that he was offered a chance to pick and sing prior to a game.

"I'll never forget that night," he smiles. "The singing led to a nightclub contract and after I entertained, I went three for four and drove in four runs."

Charley Pride finally decided to give up his baseball career in 1955 after his first recording became a hit. It was called "Snakes Crawl at Night." Since then he's had hit after hit and won award after award for his singing.

Since Jan. 1, 1971, three of his LPs have been certified as gold records. "Charley Pride's 10th Album," "Just Plain Charley" and "Charley Pride in Person." One LP certified earlier, "The Best of Charley Pride," is nearing a sale of a million copies.

But Pride admits, "I do have one other thing on my mind—I believe the only thing I would enjoy more than playing baseball would be to own a team.

"One of these days," he grins, "I might get me one."

Insight - Outsight

What about next season?

I am reading Alexander Kendrick's excellent biography of Edward R. Murrow, "Prime Time," in which Murrow's unfavorable analysis of his own medium's entertainment quality is spelled out clearly. He saw TV, as it worked its way into every home and audiences got lower in intelligence, deteriorate, gradually reaching the level of its most unintelligent, unenlightened mass. In such an audience there is little demand for quality, nor is there the probability it would be appreciated if watched. If that seems cavalier in its condescension, sobeit, but it's true.

While the networks justify pap by claiming the "public gets what it wants," I feel it's more of the "public wanting what it gets"—mostly due to conditioning by 15 years of slush in the form of comedies, westerns and crime series.

The genesis of an extensive rap on the quality of television seems to be budding here, so I'll stow it — until later. What about next year? Will it be an improvement?

Judging by network advance fall schedules, the answer is simple: no.

Most of the new series are reworkings of old ideas. I must say that I read the capsule synopsis of every proposed series and I did not detect one new thought, one original idea or even one compelling prospect.

I don't want to pass off a few random thoughts on such an involved subject, so just consider this little piece a preview of several detailed essays, if you will, on shortcomings of the 1971-72 TV season, as announced to date.

I also remain sceptical about the turning over of time to local channels, theoretically encouraging the development of crisp public affairs programs. With what resources, I wonder? Are obscure local stations supposed to possess talents capable of developing creative ideas, or will the nowhere heads reign supreme and time be filled with reruns of reruns of cancelled programs? These questions will be explored in future months.

I've been lazy as regards this column so far in 1971, but it's time to shake winter doldrums and get involved again. It may not do much good to seek out ways to improve entertainment, but it shouldn't be abandoned without one hell of a struggle.

I plan an analysis of "All in the Family," if I ever get a chance to see some more episodes. The next column will compare and contrast two concerts by the same performer, but in entirely different contexts. The artist is blues great B. B. King. "The Dick Cavett Show" will get into the act soon, and it's likely that the area movie situation and top 40 radio stations will come under scrutiny.

Be cool. Darwin's got himself back together again.

Glad You Asked That

Eleanor Powell may do 'No, No, Nanette' in London

Q: What was it Queen Elizabeth whispered to David Frost when she gave him a royal decoration recently? — Selma Valenstein, Newark.

A: As she presented the ocean-hopping talkshow host with the Order of the British Empire, the Queen quipped: "How unusual to see you in England in the middle of the week."

Q: Is it true that a Howard Hughes emissary tried to stop the Ladies Home Journal from printing the article about Hughes' estranged wife, Jean Peters? — Mrs. Arwin M., Buffalo.

A: It was the writer the "friend" tried to stop—not the magazine. As D. L. Lyons revealed in his article ("The Liberation of Mrs. Howard Hughes"), the "friend" offered to "buy" the story for $25,000 plus "trading in" his old Mustang for a new Mercedes Benz. He also disclosed that, after her divorce, Mrs. Hughes plans to marry Stanley Hough, a V.P. at 20th Century Fox—where Hughes reportedly is a major stockholder. Nevertheless, "Howard has given the couple his blessings," says a Hughes associate.

Q: I've been told I'm a direct descendant of Jenny Lind, the beautiful singing star of the 1850s known as the "Swedish Nightingale." Could this be possible? — I. Lind, Philadelphia.

A: Not unless your name is Goldschmidt. The Nightingale's name was

Jenny Maria Lind Goldschmidt.

Q: I hear that instead of the talk shows we have on late-night TV, Japanese viewers watch pornographic movies. What about it? — Pete R., Tampa, Fla.

A: That's mostly talk. Several stag films, transmitted via closed-circuit from certain Western Japanese inns, did leak onto a commercial channel at an hour when it was off the air. It was stopped when investigators tracked down the source of the unintentional public telecasts by driving around the suspected area in a car equipped with a television receiver. One feature, Variety's Tokyo correspondent reported, was entitled "Prostitution of Housewives."

Q: Hasn't Grace Kelly finally decided to come out of retirement and make a movie in Hollywood? — Mrs. Alfred R., Detroit.

A: Not really. What you may have heard is that the Princess has accepted Gregory Peck's invitation to appear in a benefit show he's producing (June 13) for the Motion Picture and TV Relief Fund. Other stars contributing their talents will include Frank Sinatra, Bob Hope, Jack Benny, and Danny Kaye. And since it will be directed by Vincente Minnelli, his daughter Lisa will probably be in the lineup.

Q: Now that Ruby Keeler's made a comeback, why don't they bring back my favorite movie tap-dancer, Eleanor Powell? And wasn't Miss Powell original model for the Columbia Pictures trademark, the lady with the torch? Rosalie Richards, Chadron, Neb.

A: "I was not the lady holding the torch — sorry about that!" replies Miss Powell. "I'm not doing anything professionally the moment. My son, Peter Ford, now 26 was married on Dec. 6, 1970. I'm so happy for Ruby Keeler. Perhaps she will bring tap-dancing back in full swing. I've already had offers to do 'No, No, Nanette' in London."

PERSONAL POSTCARDS—To V.L.M. South Bend, Ind.: Yes, the chinchilla and hat worn by Pearl Bailey on her premiere TV show, as well as the rest of her elegant wardrobe, all belong to the star. Two distinct comedy styles

"When I Was a Kid" (Bill Cosby, Uni 73100).

"Dick Gregory's Frankenstein" (Poppy PYS-69,094; two records).

"Dick Gregory at the Village Gate" (Poppy PYS-40,011).

Bill Cosby and Dick Gregory are both comedians; both are black; both use black experiences, including many from childhood, as the basis for routines. But each is vastly different than the other.

Cosby's humor is the exaggerated slice of life, mostly from his youth, his athletic days, his marriage or his children. Characters such as Fat Albert proliferate. Generally, they are wildly funny and, more subtle than Gregory, give a little insight to straight white audiences on how it feels to be black.

Gregory fulfills this latter function, too, and far more bluntly. His is the Comedy of Advocacy. He had the knack of being funny (on purpose) while campaigning for the Presidency in '68. Then, he went through a period of boring me — seeming beside the point, almost as though he was buried with the Civil Rights movement's radicalization. Lately, though, as a more out-front comedian, his recordings are entertaining while getting their messages across. The messages, granted, are familiar: targets are Trivvy Nivok, Spiggy, Lester Maddox, the right wingers in general. But they have more impact than listening to the windy rhetoric of countless liberal spokesmen who, in their dry manner, say the same things.

Almost beside the point of his lp, but important nonetheless, is Cosby's hypocrisy regarding his personal life. Whether on recordings, his TV specials, his own series or as a guest on a talk show, he exudes one quality every time — Concern. Bill is Concerned to a fault about Our Crumbling Everything. Yet he insists on enunciating a desire to, in effect, repopulate the Eastern seaboard. His desire for a huge family seems oddly out-of-place for a man worried about pollution and injustice, not a small part of which relates to overpopulation.

"Danny Cox Live at the Family Dog" (Sunflower SUN 5002).

Danny Cox has some interesting musical ideas, but they are not always well advised. One is to sing "Just Like a Woman" while playing the "Merry Widow Waltz." It doesn't work because too often he doesn't know what to do with his voice. The same is true of "Rake and Rambling Sailor Lad." But on numbers more bluish he does better. His guitar is articulate and in all contrasts profoundly with most of the r&b performers. He comes on more like a White Folky than the Black Baddy pictured on the cover.

"Mystical Soul" (John Blair, A&R ARL 7100-002).

This unusual performer was a violinist who played with the San Diego Symphony at age 15. Here, he does some jazzy violin work between acceptable, smooth r&b-flavored ballads. A grouping of "Golden Slumbers" and "O-o-h Child" (the latter featuring an anonymous female singer) is rather predictable and even trite, but it's acceptable at least.

For my tastes, Blair finally gets it together on the last two cuts — "I Don't Know Why" and "Hey Root People," both of which he wrote. For one thing, they're faster in tempo and, thus, livelier.

Some Hopeful New Experiments In Teaching Kids

By Charles and Bonnie Remsberg

Educators in small towns and large across the country this year are turning to an increasing number of unusual techniques in a mounting drive to make learning exciting, to make schoolwork relevant and to stem the tide of dropping out that threatens America's school-age population.

The full list of educational experiments underway is a long one, ranging from the use of computers to supplemental teachers in Mississippi to the decision in Gary, Ind., to turn over the entire operation of the public schools to a private company in hopes that the techniques of private enterprise can boost achievement scores. Whatever the innovation, the experimenters say they are racing with time.

Explains John Bremer, director of a project taking place in Philadelphia (see below), "The public-school system is like the brontosaurus. That old dinosaur was a magnificent creature, but it couldn't cope with changes, so it died out. In our fast-changing world, we desperately need more experimentation if we are to find the new approaches that will save education."

Here are just a few of the experiments now underway:

Classes on Location. Some 500 high-school students in Philadelphia's Parkway program are going to "school" without a school. Instead of reporting to a given classroom building, these pupils travel throughout the city to classes held in places appropriate to the subjects they are taking.

An auto-mechanics course, for example, is taught at a car-repair shop; a journalism class is held at a newspaper office. A student interested in urban economics may spend a term observing the day-to-day struggles of the deputy director of the city budget. In all, some 250 "on-location" courses are offered. The institutions which volunteer their facilities also frequently provide staff members to serve as teachers, and the youngsters themselves help plan the curriculum.

"In traditional classrooms," explains John Bremer, "Students often are taught skills relating to a society that vanished 40 years ago. By using all the facilities of the city as their campus, our students learn about life as it is really lived."

Impartial observers say the system seems to be working quite well. The youngsters learn more, mature faster and present far fewer disciplinary problems. Also, costs are cut drastically. By eliminating the need for a traditional school building to serve 500 students, the city saves about $1,000,000 in building costs alone.

Already Philadelphia's success has sparked similar programs in Chicago, Boston, Washington and Pasadena. Many other cities are examining the program.

Cash-Incentives. Teachers at Harrison Elementary School in St. Louis have turned to cash rewards as a way to heighten student interest in classwork and academic achievement. The "cash" is play money, but the classroom economy works much like the real money system.

Students are paid varying amounts of paper dollars for regular attendance, accurate test answers, extra reading, good behavior, orderly desks and creative writing. With their earnings, they can "buy" brief intermissions from class work to watch movies or TV, sit in front-row seats at special events, have extra gymnasium playtime and a great variety of other privileges.

The theory behind the Harrison school experiment is that unresponsive pupils often can be motivated to learn by being offered instant recognition for good work. The reward reinforces their desire for success, making them more attentive and determined than they would be in traditional classes.

"The public-school system is like the dinosaur—a magnificent creature, but one that couldn't cope with change. We desperately need more experimentation if we are to find the new approaches that will save education."

Child-to-Child Tutoring. At a Los Angeles elementary school, the concept of who does the best teaching is undergoing some drastic changes. In fact, some remedial work formerly done by teachers is now being assigned to the children.

Youngsters at every grade level are trained to tutor either slower members of their own class or students in lower grades in art, writing, reading, math, science and other subjects. In some cases, the young tutors supervise small groups; in others, they work on a one-to-one basis with their "pupils."

Says Dr. Ralph MeFaragno, a director of the project, "Since every individual in the school is both teacher and learner, the traditional barriers are being broken down. By tutoring, the children are able to experience new challenges. In being tutored by someone who really speaks their language, they are able to learn better and faster."

The results: kindergartners at the Pacoima school who have been tutored by other students score significantly higher than their untutored peers at other Los Angeles schools in every category of learning, from writing their own names and retelling rhymes, to identifying geometric shapes and learning to count. Now other communities, such as Cambridge, Mass., and San Diego, are following Los Angeles' lead. The Institute for Social Research in Ann Arbor, Mich., is convinced that child-to-child tutoring is definitely "a coming thing." ♦

Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Marines Have Landed--for Good

By DAN TEDRICK and JOHN PHILIP SOUSA
Associated Press Writers

CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. (AP) — Eighteen miles of sparkling beaches ... brooding peaks ... grassy valleys where cattle roam ... all warmed by a gentle sun, cooled by sea breezes.

Land developers lust for it. Beach and park officials in recreation-short California hunger for hunks of it.

But Uncle Sam says the "Not for Sale" sign is going to stay up on the 197 square miles of the Marine Corps' Camp Pendleton, the most magnificent piece of coastal land in the state's southern half still largely free of the taint of man.

Preserving it, the government says, is an environmental boon as well as a military necessity.

Pendleton, bounded on the north by the Western White House at San Clemente and on the south by the seaside community of Oceanside, is the largest sea-land military training base in the world.

Its shoreline is rimmed by dramatically vertical 100-foot cliffs, carved by the wind, notched by gullies, broken by occasional lagoons. Atop the cliff is a north-south freeway. Inland, the chapparral-coated Santa Margarita mountains, rising 3,000 feet and more, stretch beige and purple as far as the eye can see.

It has surprises. There are meadows where Leathernecks make like cowboys. There are stands of eucalyptus forest, and a 122-acre lake. Its lonely canyons meander endlessly, one looking much like another.

The Marines have won support from ecologists for their keep-the-land-unspoiled stand.

One, Dr. Malcolm Gordon of the University of California at Los Angeles, says: "Any chunk of reasonable countryside should be hung onto for dear life, because there's a very little prospect that there'll be anything around that can be preserved. 'Relatively undeveloped areas between population concentrations are important, so places like Camp Pendleton are important.'"

Since 1942, when President Franklin D. Roosevelt commissioned it, Camp Pendleton has been a buffer between Orange and San Diego counties, two of the booming areas of the nation's most populous state.

Raw land on the southern edge sells for $8,000 an acre. In the more built-up San Clemente area, President Nixon paid $340,000 for his 14-room vacation home and five acres. In valleys to the east land runs $3,000 to $8,000 per acre. Beachfront land anywhere in Southern California starts at $1,000 a front foot.

"There will be a megalopolis extending almost unbroken from Santa Barbara to the Mexican border" by the turn of the century, predicts the base logistics officer, Col. A. C. Biwen. "As far as the Marine Corps is concerned, Camp Pendleton then should be what it is today—an island of undeveloped real estate."

Land as It Was
By the year 2,000, he says, the camp will be the only place in Southern California "where one can see land as it was in the state of nature."

There has been talk of turning the base into a national park or monument some day. Any such talk, the Marines say, should be related to military needs.

Do the Marines really need so much space? "We need our shoreline desperately for training because it encompasses every kind that Marines may be expected to assault someday," says a spokesman.

First white man to see the area was Gaspar de Portola, the Spanish explorer, in 1769. He named the Santa Margarita Valley for a martyred saint whose holy day it was.

Pio Pico, later Spanish governor in California, and his brother Andres controlled the land in the mid-1800s.

An Englishman, John Forester, married the Pico's sister Ysidora and bought the ranch. When Forester died in 1882, Richard O'Neil purchased the land for $250,000 but sold it soon for $450,000 to James Flood of San Francisco.

Heirs of O'Neil and Flood formed a corporation controlling the 181,000 acres, known as the Santa Margarita Ranch. The U.S. government paid $4.2 million for 120,000 acres when the need arose for a West Coast training base.

Pendleton Crowded
By the middle years of World War II, Camp Pendleton was crowded with young fighting men headed for battle in the Pacific.

Its manpower stands now at 32,000. A total of 170,000 sailors and Marines will have been trained at Camp Pendleton in 1970—from new recruits learning basic combat to veterans in advanced communication.

The air station at El Toro, 10 miles to the north, combines to form the Marines' major air-ground training operation for the Pacific.

The base is a khaki kaleidoscope of military training. Besides its use as a predeployment center for men headed for the western Pacific, it gives basic infantry training to new Marines and advanced training for regular infantrymen.

There are occasional large-scale sea-land assault operations with Navy ships, maneuvers involving planes from El Toro, field operations for artillery units, training the fleet Marine units, simulated combat in towns built to look like war zone villages in Asia and Europe. And, there are problems.

Racial conflicts have made headlines. There have been half a dozen or more disturbances on the base, including near-riots in the crowded brig. Funds have been approved for new facilities and other steps taken to relieve tensions.

FBI Probe
The FBI is investigating two incidents involving theft of weapons which some claim were earmarked for black militants.

The public is barred from most areas of the base.

Exceptions are visitors to a Southern California Edison nuclear power facility, beside the freeway at San Onofre, and the famed surfing beach at San Onofre where the waves rise high a quarter mile or more seaward.

Mary Martin goes south, pacifically

Dennis Redmont

ANAPOLIS, Brazil (AP) — Mary Martin is alive happy, and living in Anapolis. The only sound of music in her life nowadays is the snipping of the scissors on clothes for her new boutique, and the whirr of the hairdryers in her beauty parlor.

Mary Martin, the world-famous musical star of "I Do, I Do," "South Pacific," and "Peter Pan," is busy fulfilling what she calls "my easiest two-year contract."

Installed on a sprawling farm deep in the interior of Brazil, about 200 miles southwest of the capital city of Brasilia, Miss Martin vowed to keep away from show business for at least two years after a serious illness. She called it quits in February 1969 when she took ill during a road performance of "I Do, I Do."

Miss Martin fled to Brazil, where her husband and manager, Richard Halliday, owns a ranch he carved out from the jungle 16 years ago — but never used.

"We have 7,000 hens and they lay like crazy," she explains. "We grow wheat, rice vegetables and every known fruit under the sun. We have 300 rosebushes so it takes two days to gather roses. We have no electricity nor telephone, so what else do you want?"

Mary Martin wanted something else. After all, the city of Anapolis, population 100,000, did not have a beauty parlor, nor a boutique for that matter. And Miss Martin wanted to graduate from needlepoint — about which she recently wrote a book — to bigger and better things.

"So I asked Richard whether he would build a boutique for me," she adds nonchalantly. "And he did."

The result, in downtown Anapolis, is a Japanese-like pagoda, with columns in bright red, white and black. Sliding doors open on "Nossa Loja," (our shop) a combination of haute coiffure and couture.

Ike Edison

"For the beauty shop, I got together with a Japanese iron-monger and Brazilian sink maker, and I had them build an armchair you can tip back to wash your hair. It took three months but when it was finished, I felt like Edison.

"Then I sewed myself up a Mary Martin collection, and we had ourselves an opening day."

More than 1,000 persons — some even made the four-hour flight from Sao Paulo — attended the grand opening to the tune of a four-man combo composed of local Mormon missionaries.

Does the blissful life in the heart of the Brazilian jungle suit Mary Martin?

"I feel wonderful," she replies. "I'm not afraid to say I'm 57. I'm not anxious to do eight shows a week. I never saw anyone during those shows. Just people crowding around at the stage door. Now I've been here for the past year-and-a-half and I've never even been to Rio. I have lost a sense of time. I've never had so much fun in my life."

Does this mean she is through with the stage? "Well, any ham should never say he's going to retire because they never do. But I signed a two-year contract with Richard, that I would stay down here, to rest and to live, and I may be inclined to renew it."

Miss Martin's "contract" expires this spring and she has dozens of offers to return to Broadway.

Often dubbed "The First Lady of American Musical Theater," it was Miss Martin who approached Rogers and Hammerstein with the idea of bringing Maria von Trapp to the musical state. After the musical was written, she never missed a performance during her two years on Broadway with "The Sound of Music."

Later, Miss Martin took "Hello Dolly" around the world including Japan, Vietnam, Okinawa and Korea, and concluding with a six-month triumph at London's Drury Lane.

"But who wants to go back to an 83-city tour of 'Music with Mary Martin,' when I am happy here on the Fazenda?"

A Fazenda is Brazil's version of Miss Martin's native Texas ranch. Revisited by the girl from Weatherford, Tex., it has the Hallidays' own brand—a sign with clasped hands—at the entrance. Thirty persons live on the farm, selling all of the produce on the Anapolis market. Texas-style features include a his-and-hers sitting pool.

"At the beginning there was nothing here. Sixteen years ago, we were on a freighter in Santos with Janet Gaynor and she went looking for a ranch in the jungle. 'If you ever hear of a place for sale, let us know,' we told her. And she found we one. We could never stay here more than two months at a time. But now we're here for a long time."

Mary Martin's expansion plans include a greater line of clothes, Texas-style hats, and "Nossa Loja" brand long, ethereal dresses.

"This has been such a gas, that I think I'll have to put out a catalogue," she says.

The Perfect, Right
Diamond For Her!

When you are ready to select a diamond, come in and let our experts guide your choice. The value and beauty of a diamond is determined by four factors. Jewelers call these the "4 C's" of diamond value — Color, Clarity (its flawlessness), Cut (which gives a diamond brilliance and fire) and carat weight.

We have diamonds in many shapes, oval and marquise. Cut not only refers to shape, but also to the precision angling of facets which release the hidden brilliance of the gem.

After you have decided on the right diamond, our expert designers will personally assist you in selecting a custom-design mounting which will further enhance the beauty of the gem. Come in soon!

for a Registered Nurse at Home if your doctor has you hire one within five days following a covered hospital confinement of five days or more.

PAYS YOU CASH up to $2,000.00 for complete accidental loss of limbs or eyesight.

NO AGE LIMIT—NO SALESMAN WILL CALL

One out of two families will have someone in the hospital this year! It could be you—or some beloved member of your family—tomorrow...next week...next month. Sad to say, very few families have anywhere near enough coverage to meet today's soaring hospital costs. These costs have more than doubled in just a few short years.

Stop for a moment. Think how much a long stay in the hospital will cost you or a loved one. How would you ever pay for costly, but necessary, X-rays, doctor bills, drugs and medicines? Many have learned the hard way that public and private insurance pays only 40% of the nation's total medical care bill. What would you do if your pay check stopped, but living expenses kept going on the same as ever? The same rent, phone, food, all the day-to-day expenses that never stop.

All benefits of this $500.00-a-month National Home plan are paid directly to you, in tax-free cash, in addition to whatever you may receive from your insurance with any other companies! Use the money as you see fit—for hospital or doctors' bills, mortgage payments—or any necessary, but costly, extras not fully covered by other hospital policies.

While 7 out of 8 Americans have some hospital insurance, most have found it does not cover all bills that pile up when sickness or accident strikes. That's why National Home developed this low-cost plan that helps you pay either hospital costs or anything else you need!

For older folks—greater protection than you ever would have thought possible!

Right now, would advancing age prevent you from getting hospital insurance, or income protection with another company? Or if you could get a policy elsewhere, would you have to pay a big premium for it? Your "life saver" could be this National Home Hospital Plan (NH10-669)—because National Home welcomes folks of all ages into its plans. Yes, even if you're 65 or over, even if you're over 100—each time you go to the hospital

A MONTH tax-free cash for each hospital stay.

Guaranteed Renewable for Life. National Home guarantees never to cancel your valuable protection—no matter how old you become or how many claims you may have. In addition, your rates can never be changed unless there is a general rate adjustment on all policies of this type in your entire state.

you collect benefits at the rate of $250.00 a month for the first 3 months, and $500.00 monthly afterwards, during continuous confinement...even for life.

Pays you $300.00-a-month cash whenever any dependent child is hospitalized.

When you choose Coverage for Children, all your unmarried dependent children from age one month through 18 years are covered, too! What's more, any newborn children you have in the future are covered automatically at the age of one month—at no additional cost to you. And whenever any of your children go to the hospital, this National Home plan pays you at the rate of $300.00-a-month cash, for as long as necessary. Children are covered for accidents from the first day and for sickness from the sixth day.

And that's not all. Suppose you have a growing family. This National Home plan...

Pays you at the rate of $500.00 a month for Maternity Benefits!

Other hospital insurance may take care of part of your expenses when you go to the hospital to have a baby. But what policy can you think of that gives you cash to help you pay for all the things you need for the new baby? Now, if both husband and wife are insured for the entire period of pregnancy (and have added Coverage for Children and Maternity Benefits), you get tax-free cash to use any way you want. If a pregnancy, childbirth or even miscarriage puts you in the hospital for one day, five days, ten days—as long as necessary—you get cash benefits for every day of your confinement.

Pays you $400.00-a-month cash for a Registered Nurse at Home.

Yes, in addition to the $500.00-a-month cash we send you for your hospital stay, we pay you an additional $400.00 a month if the doctor has you employ a full-time registered nurse to take care of you at home.

How comforting it is to know that—after your stay in the hospital, if you've been there five days or more for which benefits were payable—you can return home to recuperate and yet not be a burden to your loved ones. Yes, if your doctor has you employ a full-time registered nurse within 5 days after you come home, we'll pay you benefits at the rate of $400.00 a month. And your benefits continue for the same number of covered days that you were in the hospital—up to 12 full months.

Double Cash Accident Benefit.

When you and your insured spouse are hospitalized at the same time for an accidental injury, this National Home plan pays you an EXTRAORDINARY DOUBLE CASH BENEFIT. You receive not $500.00 but $1,000.00 a month. Your spouse receives not $500.00 but $1,000.00 a month. That's $2,000.00 in all, in cash payments to you every month (when under age 65) starting the day you enter the hospital for as long as you both remain there.

Pays you up to $2,000.00 cash for these accidental losses...

The accidental loss of limbs or eyesight can be terrible. But if such loss occurs any time within 90 days of the accident, you collect $1,000.00 for the complete loss of a hand or a foot or the sight of an eye—and $2,000.00 for loss of two limbs or the sight of both eyes.

Waiver of premium benefit.

Should you—the policyowner—be hospitalized for eight consecutive weeks or more, this National Home plan will PAY ALL PREMIUMS that come due for you and all Covered Members of your family while you are confined to the hospital beyond this initial eight-week period. And your protection continues just the same as if you were paying the premiums yourself. Then, if you leave the hospital and must return for the same condition before you have resumed full normal activities for 90 days, we will again pay any premiums coming due while you are in the hospital. This means you pay no premiums, yet your full protection remains in force for as long as you are in the hospital. This protection applies only when the policyowner is hospitalized.

These are the only exclusions!

Your National Home policy covers every kind of sickness or accident except conditions caused by: act of war; any mental disease or disorder; pregnancy, except as provided under the Maternity Benefit provision; and any sickness or injury you had before the Effective Date of your policy ... during the first two years only.

This last item is a real help if you already have a health problem. You will even be covered for that condition after the policy has been in effect for only two years.

How can 25¢ buy so much?

You can buy other insurance any time and pay the regular rates, if you wish, but this National Home plan can now provide you and your entire family with $500.00-a-month tax-free cash protection for just 25¢ the first month. Why? Because we enroll a large number of people at one time—direct by mail! This highly efficient "mass enrollment" method reduces our costs—the savings are passed on to you!

Why you must act before the date shown on your Enrollment Form—just a few days from today.

Why do we give you so little time to enroll in this plan? Because this is a guaranteed enrollment offer, we can open the enrollment only during a limited time period—with a firm deadline date for everyone. To provide you with this broad coverage at these rates, we must receive your Enrollment Form during the same period as all the others.

As soon as we receive your Enrollment Form we will rush your policy to you by First Class Mail. When your policy arrives, examine it in the privacy of your own home. It is a very short document and you'll be pleasantly surprised to see there is no fine print. Show it, if you wish, to your doctor, lawyer, insurance agent, or some other trusted advisor.

Nationally known and respected.

This is the kind of outstanding protection you may have seen in Reader's Digest, Parents, National Geographic and other leading publications. The special plans offered by the National Liberty Corporation group of companies are today helping policyowners in all 50 states—and many foreign countries—paying benefits at the rate of more than $1,500,000.00 a month. In addition, our company has a RECOMMENDED rating from Best's Insurance Reports, one of the foremost insurance authorities in the nation.

65 OR OVER?

We have designed this plan as a valuable addition to whatever is paid by Medicare—or health insurance you may have with any other companies. In fact, combined public and private insurance covers only about 57% of the total medical costs for people 65 or over. Checks will be sent directly to you (not to the doctor or hospital). This National Home plan pays you at the rate of $250.00 a month for the first 3 months, in addition to any benefits you may receive from Medicare, and $500.00 monthly while hospitalized thereafter ... even for life, if necessary.

Fast, Reliable Claim Service When Needed Most.

You never really know how good a policy is until you have to make a claim. That's why we think you'll be interested in what some of our National Home members have to say. Their comments—quoted below—are typical of the hundreds of expressions of appreciation we receive from policyowners every week ...

"Received your checks totaling $585.68 for injury. I appreciated your kindness and promptness in the claim. It certainly came in handy and I had less worries knowing I had this protection. You certainly paid all the benefits stated in the policy without question."

MRS. ANGELA B. HARDY, Abbeville, Louisiana
"You folks were very prompt in sending the money when my wife went to the hospital for surgery. Thank you so much."

HAROLD DOVENBORG, Zanesville, Ohio
"I was more than satisfied with the way my claim was handled. One couldn't ask for better service and the 'get well soon' message was one of the nicest thoughts on your part. I thank you sincerely."

MARGUERITE LINDAU, Duluth, Minnesota

OUTSTANDING AMERICANS LIKE THESE RECOMMEND THIS COVERAGE.

DR. E. STANLEY JONES, internationally known evangelist, author, missionary statesman:

"In offering low-cost health insurance by mail, you are rendering a valuable service to thousands of people who have no other opportunity to avail themselves of such protection. It's reassuring to know that policyowners insured by the National Liberty group are receiving more than $1,500,000.00 a month in benefits."

LT. GEN. W. K. HARRISON, U.S. Army (Retired):

"People benefit in many ways when they purchase insurance direct by mail from National Home Life Assurance Company. They save money through lower rates. No salesman calls. I consider it a sensible, economical way to increase one's health protection in these days of mounting hospital and medical costs."

JEROME HINES, leading bass with the Metropolitan Opera Company: "It seems to me that the concept of health insurance by mail is a very sensible one. It's quick, easy and economical. Nobody makes surprise visits to your home to ask personal questions. And costly processing charges are eliminated. This means more protection at less cost. I congratulate National Home Life Assurance Company for meeting a real need."

Money-Back Guarantee — in case you change your mind.

You are still free to return the policy within 15 days after receiving it, and your quarter will be refunded at once. There will be no obligation whatsoever. Meanwhile, all during the 15 days you are making up your mind—you'll be protected by $500.00-a-month tax-free cash benefits. That's right, you will be fully covered all this time for any accident or illness which puts you in the hospital.

After you've seen the policy for yourself, you will surely agree that this is a tremendous value and you'll want to continue this $500.00-a-month additional cash protection.

Here are your low rates.

The following rate chart shows how little it costs after the first month, to cover yourself, your spouse or any adult dependent. Naturally, at these low rates we can issue you only one policy of this type. Each adult, 16 or over, pays the rate shown for his or her age.

Age at Enrollment	Monthly Premium per Adult
16-44	only $2.95
45-49	only $3.40
50-54	only $3.75
55-74	only $4.35
75-79	only $5.00
80-84	only $5.55
85 and over	only $6.65

Only $1.55 more per month covers all your unmarried dependent children ... from the age of 1 month through 18 years. Newborn children are covered automatically at the age of one month—at no additional cost. And then, if you wish, just add $1.15 monthly to that, and you're covered for Maternity Benefits, too.

NOTE: The regular monthly premium shown above (for age at time of enrollment) is the same low premium you will continue to pay; it will not automatically increase as you pass from one age bracket to the next. Once you have enrolled in this National Home plan, your rate can never be changed because of how much or how often you collect from us—or because of advanced age—but only if there is a general rate adjustment, up or down, on all policies of this type in your entire state.

Act now—"later" may be too late!
Only 25¢ covers your entire family for the first month.

TIME IS PRECIOUS! Act quickly. (No salesman will call). Get your Enrollment Form into the mail today—because once you suffer an accident or sickness, it's TOO LATE to buy protection at any cost. That's why we urge you to act now—before anything unexpected happens.

... during the first two years only. This last item is a real help if you already have a health problem. You will even be covered for that condition after the policy has been in effect for only two years.

How can 25¢ buy so much?

You can buy other insurance any time and pay the regular rates, if you wish, but this National Home plan can now provide you and your entire family with $500.00-a-

We have designed this plan as a valuable addition to whatever is paid by Medicare—or health insurance you may have with any other companies. In fact, combined public and private insurance covers only about 57% of the total medical costs for people 65 or over. Checks will be sent directly to you (not to the doctor or hospital). This National Home plan pays you at the rate of $250.00 a month for the first 3 months, in addition to any benefits you may receive from Medicare, and $500.00 monthly while hospitalized thereafter... even for life, if necessary.

Fast, Reliable Claim Service When Needed Most.

You never really know how good a policy is until you have to make a claim. That's why we think you'll be interested in what comes of our National Home plan.

Typical of the hundreds of expressions of appreciation we receive from policyowners every week...

"Received your check totaling $585.66 for injury. I appreciated your kindness and promptness in the payment of this claim. Thank you very much."

"I was more than satisfied with the way my claim was handled. One couldn't ask for better service and the 'get well soon' message was one of the nicest thoughts on your part. I thank you sincerely."

After you've seen the policy for yourself, you will surely agree that this is a tremendous value and you'll want to continue this $500.00-a-month additional cash protection.

Here are your low rates.

The following rate chart shows how little it costs after the first month, to cover yourself, your spouse or any adult dependent. Naturally, at these low rates we can issue you only one policy of this type. Each adult, 16 or over, pays the rate shown for his or her age.

Age at Enrollment

Monthly Premium

per Adult

16-44.....only $2.95

45-49.....only $3.40

50-54.....only $3.75

55-74.....only $4.35

75-79.....only $5.00

80-84.....only $5.55

85 and over.....only $6.65

Only $1.55 more per month covers all your unmarried dependent children...

from the age of 1 month through 18 years. Newborn children are covered automatically.

at the age of one month—at no additional cost. And then, if you wish, just add $1.15 monthly to that, and you're covered for Maternity Benefits, too.

NOTE: The regular monthly premium shown above (for age at time of enrollment) is the same low premium you will continue to pay; it will not automatically increase as you pass from one age bracket to the next. Once you have enrolled in this National Home plan, your rate can never be changed because of how much or how often you collect from us—or because of advanced age—but only if there is a general rate adjustment, up or down, on all policies of this type in your entire state.

Act now—"later" may be too late! Only 25¢ covers your entire family for the first month.

TIME IS PRECIOUS! Act quickly. (No salesman will call). Get your Enrollment Form into the mail today—because once you suffer an accident or sickness, it's TOO LATE to buy protection at any cost. That's why we urge you to act now—before anything unexpected happens.

Have you enclosed your 25¢ coin with your completed Form?

20 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

tell you how this National Home Hospital Plan gives you the protection you need. Costs only 25¢ for the first month.

1. How much will I be paid when I go to the hospital?

You collect cash benefits at the rate of $500.00 a month ($16.67 a day). When you're 65 or over, you collect cash benefits on top of Medicare at the rate of $250.00 a month for first three months, and $500.00 monthly while you remain continuously hospitalized thereafter.

2. Do you pay me cash when my children go to the hospital? And...for any children I have in the future?

Yes! You collect cash benefits at the rate of $300.00 a month any time your child goes to the hospital, when Coverage for Children is added to the basic plan. And if you have a growing family—as soon as your newborn child is one month old, he, too, is covered—automatically... at no additional cost to you.

3. When do I start to collect hospital benefits?

This new plan (NH10-669) covers you from the very first day for accidents and from the sixth day for sickness—even for life, if necessary! Most everyone has some insurance or savings to take care of a one to five-day hospital stay. Since we provide lifetime benefits, this "deductible" feature enables us to give you broad coverage at a lower cost than would otherwise be possible.

4. Will you pay me cash benefits for pregnancy?

Yes! While some health plans don't cover pregnancy, we do, when Coverage for Children and Maternity Benefits are added to the basic plan. You collect benefits at the rate of $500.00 a month—for pregnancy, childbirth or miscarriage that results in a hospital stay. (Both parents have to be enrolled in this plan for entire pregnancy period.)

5. How much do I receive for a Registered Nurse at Home?

You collect cash benefits at the rate of $400.00 a month when your doctor has you employ a full-time registered nurse within 5 days after you return home. You need only to have been hospitalized, and received benefits for 5 days or more. Your Registered Nurse at Home benefits continue during employment of the nurse for the same number of covered days you were in the hospital—even for as long as 12 full months.

6. Are there times I might collect Double Cash Benefits?

There are! If husband and wife are hospitalized at the same time due to accidental injury, EACH will receive Double Cash Benefits! Thus a married couple, under age 65, could count on receiving $2,000.00 for as long as both are confined to the hospital.

7. Are there any other cash benefits I can collect?

We pay you $1,000.00 cash for complete accidental loss of one hand or one foot or sight of one eye, and $2,000.00 cash for loss of both hands or both feet or sight of both eyes—even if the loss occurs as long as 3 months after the accident.

8. If I'm hospitalized less than a month—do you still pay me cash benefits?

Yes! We pay you at the rate of $500.00 a month for every day you're in the hospital due to an accident. Sickness benefits begin on the sixth day.

9. What if I already have some health or hospital insurance—will you pay me anyway...on top of what they pay me?

Of course we will! That's the beauty of your National Home plan. Never mind what you collect from Blue Cross Hospitalization Plans, Blue Shield Medical Plans or Workmen's Compensation. We still pay you cash benefits at the rate of $500.00 a month—even for life, if necessary. So, if other insurance has taken care of some—or even all—of your medical bills... you still have that tax-free cash income from this National Home plan. Isn't that a nice way to end an illness? Naturally, at these low rates, we can issue you only one policy of this type.

10. Can I use my cash benefits any way I please?

Yes! Use the money any way you choose. Use it to pay your hospital, doctor and nursing bills. Use it to pay for rent, food and clothing. Or put it in the bank to replace any income lost during your hospital stay. All cash comes straight to you (not to doctor or hospital unless you request it) so you alone decide how it is to be spent!

11. Suppose I'm hospitalized for a long time and can't meet my premium payments?

If you, the policyowner, are hospitalized for eight consecutive weeks or more, National Home will PAY ALL PREMIUMS that come due for you and all Covered Members of your family while you are confined to the hospital beyond this initial eight-week period. This includes all premiums—for every Covered Member. Even if you are in for months, a year—for life. Thanks to the Waiver of Premium feature in your policy, we pay all premiums for you as long as you are hospitalized. And you don't even have to pay us back. You simply go right on collecting your full $500.00-a-month cash benefits just as if you were paying the premiums yourself.

12. How can you give so much—for so little?

Because you buy your policy directly from the company. You don't deal through middlemen. You eliminate costly processing charges and "red tape" that raise the cost of most insurance. That's the reason why National Home can provide you with low-cost health insurance protection, including a full month's coverage for your family, for only 25¢!

13. What do I do when I have a claim?

Whether you have a claim, or just want to ask us a question, don't hesitate to contact us. As a National Home policyowner, you are entitled to prompt, courteous and direct attention at all times...and you will get it.

14. Because this National Home plan costs less...do I get less protection?

Absolutely not. You get more! $500.00 monthly cash payments for each hospital stay. And you get tax-free cash benefits when any Covered Members of your family go to the hospital. Yet all you pay to put this policy in force for one month is...25¢. And then you may continue this protection afterwards at the regular low National Home rates shown! That's why we urge you—for your own satisfaction—to compare these big cash benefits with any comparable policy issued by any other insurance company... anywhere.

15. Now tell me what's the "catch", what doesn't my policy cover?

Get ready for a welcome surprise. Your policy covers everything except conditions caused by: act of war; any mental disease or disorder; pregnancy, except as provided under the Maternity Benefit provision; and any sickness or injury you had before the Effective Date of your policy—but even this last "exclusion" is done away with after you've been a policyowner for only two years. Everything else is definitely covered.

16. Does this plan pay in any hospital?

This plan pays for coverage in the hospital of your choice except, of course, a U.S. Government hospital or a nursing or convalescent facility.

17. Will you cancel my policy if I have too many claims? Or because of advanced age?

No—positively not! Only you can cancel. The company cannot—no matter how many claims you have...how old you become...or for any other reason whatsoever. In addition, your rates can never be changed unless there is a general rate adjustment on all policies of this type in your entire state.

18. What are the requirements to enroll in this National Home plan?

You must not have been refused or had cancelled any health, hospital or life insurance due to reasons of health; and, to qualify during this Enrollment Period, you must enroll before midnight of the date shown on the Enrollment Form.

19. Besides saving money—are there any other advantages to joining this plan during this Enrollment Period?

Yes. A very important one is that you don't need to complete a long, detailed application—just the brief Form on the back of this booklet. Also, during this Enrollment Period there are no extra requirements for eligibility, and no "waivers" or restrictive endorsements can be put on your policy!

20. How do I enroll?

Fill out the brief Enrollment Form and mail it with just 25¢ for the first month's protection for your entire family. Mail to: National Home, Valley Forge, Pa. 19481.

HOME & GARDEN

'Uncommon' Vegetables Can be Tasty

Gardening is a major recreational and educational experience for millions of people of all ages in Wisconsin. The state's home gardeners are fortunate in having excellent varieties available, according to O. B. Combs, University of Wisconsin extension horticulturist. Many of these varieties have been tested in experimental gardens.

He emphasized the importance of choosing varieties wisely. In discussing some of those observed at the experimental farms at Hancock and Madison and in market gardens around the state he said soil type and drainage should be considered in selecting the proper varieties. Sweet potatoes can be grown quite successfully in southern Wisconsin on lighter, well drained soils, he said.

Plant Imports

Since sweet potatoes are not used as a commercial crop in Wisconsin, individuals will have to import plants from the south. He suggested using one or more of the very dark orange-fleshed varieties such as Centennial or All Gold. These are nutritionally valuable because of their high vitamin A content.

Southerners who have moved to Wisconsin commonly grow okra in their gardens. Combs said Clemson Spineless is one of the best okra varieties. Although many transplanted Southerners in Wisconsin grow mustard greens collards and kale, many northerners feel their flavor is too strong. These vegetables grow well in Wisconsin. If grown and harvested during cool, moist fall weather, their flavor will be much milder.

Another vegetable commonly grown in the south is the black-eyed pea, which, Combs said, is not a pea at all. It is a cowpea from a different botanical species than the lima bean or soup bean. Most black eyed peas grown in the Southern states are relatively late varieties. However, early varieties such as Texas Cream 40, California Black Eye No. 5, and Purple Hull 49 are adapted to Wisconsin's growing season. They mature in 65 to 75 days.

Combs said the "so-called" "tree" tomato comes from Peru and definitely is not suited for the Wisconsin garden. It is a woody plant which does not produce fruits until the second season, and this would mean bringing them into the house or greenhouse for the winter months. Further, the ripened fruits are tough-skinned, small and have objectionable seeds. These plants are being grown to a limited degree in New Zealand as a commercial crop. Small fruited tomatoes, like the "tree" tomato and the regular one, are members of the nightshade family. Fruits of the variety Small Fry do not come from a small plant as one might think. However, the plants are very productive and the tomatoes have a beautiful color and are very tasty and tender.

Small Tomato

Tiny Tim, another small fruited tomato, produces some nice fruit, but much of it is small and many are seedless. Since most of the tomato flavor is associated with the fleshy material immediately around seeds, they have little flavor.

All sorts of stakes, sticks, and trellises may be used to stake tomatoes. Combs said the type of support is not so important as proper use. The stakes should be put in when tomatoes are planted so roots are not damaged by driving in the stake or digging holes. The plants should be attached with loose string or a piece of cloth wrapped at least twice around the stake and passed around the tomato stem just below a large leaf or fruit cluster. The string or cloth should be soft so it does not cut into the plant stem.

Combs said it is important to use good quality organic matter to keep garden soil loose, make oxygen available to roots, and provide proper drainage. Good sources for the home gardener are compost, lawn clippings, leaves, particularly deciduous ones, and miscellaneous disease-free vegetable plant leaves and stems.

Soil Quality

The simplest compost pile is made by piling up decaying vegetable leaves, permitting them to decompose and working them into garden soil. Combs said another way is to add soil and commercial fertilizer to decaying materials. This increases the fertility content and helps it decompose more rapidly.

The best time to add organic matter is when the garden is prepared in the spring. It should be spaded, plowed or discd into the soil where it will decompose more rapidly and help holdlist of vegetable varieties will be available from all county extension offices. It will contain information about variety lists, disease resistance, suitability for freezing, safe planting dates, and whether the plant is a hybrid of regular variety.

Combs said horticultural specialists not only work with university test gardens but gain information by observing home and commercial gardens throughout the state. A revised

Safety Procedures Vital When Using Power Mowers

Steep slopes, gravel drives, ways, and low hanging trees all can pose dangers facing Fox Valley residents as they take power mowers out this spring.

Great care must be used when mowing slopes. If they are too sharp, avoid mowing them at all. Grass may be replaced with a ground cover, a rock garden, or retaining wall, according to the Outdoor Power Equipment Institute.

When walking behind a mower on a hill, mow across slopes laterally — never up and down. With a riding mower or lawn tractor, the rule is just the opposite, mow up and down for greater stability and avoid sudden uphill starts.

On gravel drives disengage of sticks, stones or other foreign objects. Children should be kept away from an area when mowing is being done. The feet of operators can be cut unless care is taken when mowers are started. When m-

Low hanging branches also can pose trouble when mowing, cautions the Institute. For maximum safety branches may be cut before mowing. Where branches cannot be trimmed special care should be taken to avoid accidents.

Clean Lawns Important For increased safety homeowners should learn about their mowers by reading operation manuals.

Lawns also should be cleared chines are started discharge chutes should be avoided.

Fox Valley residents also should dress the part when they do lawnwork. The risk of injury is increased when operators wear shorts, sandals or walk in bare feet behind mowers. Loose clothing can easily catch in moving parts of the mowers and could lead to injury.

Safety Procedure

When repairs are made stop the engine and disconnect the spark plug so machines cannot start suddenly. Before starting the machine again place it in neutral to avoid accidents. Always roll mowers out of buildings to fill their tanks with gasoline. Gas tanks should be filled when work is started. Gasoline never should be poured into the tank of a running machine or into a hot engine.

Stop Engines

Running mowers should not be left unattended and children should not be permitted to be taken.

operate mowers. Machines should be maintained in top condition for maximum efficiency. Power mowers are designed to be pushed, pulling them could result in an accident. Good footing is vital to safe operation of power equipment. When walking along slopes or on wet grass special care should be taken.

'Surgery' Beautifys Woodwork in Rooms

A hammer-and-saw facelifting carried across the face of often can transform a lifeless room into a beautiful area.

A cover-up treatment for walls is preferred by many architects and decorators. It avoids repair work on cracked or out-of-plumb walls, and provides an opportunity to create character where none existed.

Wall areas can be boxed in, built out and simply covered with solid board paneling applied over furring strips. Space can be created at the same time for storage cabinets and open shelving.

Transform Hearth A problem hearth wall can be handled in this manner. If a fireplace juts into the room, leaving recesses on either side, a good remedy is to build high cabinets into the side niches, connecting the

The chimney breast. Paneling can be repeated above cabinets and open bookshelves can be constructed. The design gives hearth walls a smooth, restful line which carries the eye across the surface yet provides interesting details. Embellishments can be added. A mantelpiece can be built using stock moldings from a lumberyard. Framing can be added around the sides and top of the bookshelves using moldings or decoratively cut boards. A handsome cornice can ease the wall into the ceiling, avoiding a harsh right-angled junction.

Proper Wood

Tongue-and-groove boards for the paneling and decorative moldings are easy to obtain and work with. Professionals often choose Ponderosa pine or western hemlock for their workability. Both are top appearance woods.

The final touch comes in finishing. A clear finish usually is preferred since natural wood is so simple to care for and easy to live with. Many tough, clear plastic varnishes available today come in a "hand rubbed" or "satin" finish that may be brushed on straight from the can and yet achieve a hand buffed effect. Ponderosa pine finished this way will be a warm brown color of medium tone with neither gold nor red highlights. Hemlock will first appear to be a pale straw color, but within six months' time, mellows to a rich golden beige impossible to duplicate with stains.

Agronomist Builds Test Device

Growth Unit Fits Budget

Fox Valley gardeners don't need massive budgets for expensive growth chambers if they want to experiment with plants.

Plant breeders, plant physiologists, and other researchers who don't have or don't want to use large, expensive growth chambers for small-scale seed germination research may want to build their own — agronomist Willard C. Robecker did at Pullman, Wash.

Chamber Unavailable

There wasn't a regular growth chamber available for Dr. Robecker's seed germination studies, but there was space in a cold room. So he used one-inch thick rigid styrofoam building insulation to make a shallow, lidded box about 16 inches square — large enough to hold 16 petri dishes.

Then Robecker, placed a pair of 120-volt, 7.5 watt bulbs painted black inside the box to provide the needed heat without light to affect light-sensitive seeds. Then he inserted a dial-type thermostat through one wall and connected it, along with the lights, to a timeclock to regulate temperature duration. A dial thermometer insert-which many NSPI members use as a basis for their own — is a valuable document, both in alerting the prospect to certain potential problem areas as well as in providing some way of checking the general acceptability of the contract offered by the particular builder.

Additional information may be obtained by writing the National Swimming Pool Institute; 2000 K Street, Northwest; Washington, D.C. 20006.

completed the germinator. Results Get Nod

"My germination box, which can be easily built to almost any size, can be used in any room or refrigerator where a desired minimum temperature can be maintained," he said, adding, "it's more versatile than commercial models for the special conditions we encounter in seed germination studies."

Dr. Robecker's chamber cost about $5, plus the price of the thermostat.

Factory Produced Houses Solution to Tight Budget?

MADISON — Houses built in factories, in one form or another, appear to be increasing in importance.

Ted Brevik, University of Wisconsin extension building specialist, said there are a number of reasons why this will be true. Increasing site costs, increasing costs of on-site construction and problems presented by weather, all will contribute to the trend.

In the past, extension housing specialists have dealt primarily with single-family residences in rural areas. However, the housing situation is changing considerably and the agency now is studying new types of housing educational programs needed in the future.

National Study

During a national conference in Atlanta, Ga., zoning codes, real estate taxes, new materials, new construction techniques, and factory construction developments, were evaluated.

Brevik said housing costs have increased to the point that only one American family in five can afford to buy a new house. This figure was two families in five just a few years ago. Some people in the housing industry even feel the single family residence on a large lot eventually may become a museum piece.

There are many approaches to factory-built houses. These include complete units such as mobile homes, or units where the house is built in two parts, taken to the site and put together.

New Construction

There is the modular construction approach where the house is built in complete sections. These are brought to the site and "stacked," or assembled in some other manner.

In the panel method, wall, floor and roof sections, as well as other sections, are built in the plant, taken to the job and assembled.

Still another approach is the complete fabrication of kitchens and bathrooms which then are installed in conventional houses.

Brevik said several problems have plagued factory construction. These houses have not received wide public acceptance. There has been difficulty in making fully efficient use of the plants because of their inflexibility. Another major problem has been in transporting completed units because of their physical size.

Regarding new construction techniques and materials, Brevik said steel and aluminum companies have developed steel and aluminum studs, floor systems, and trusses to improve designs.

The trend in woods is to try to simplify construction. The typical wall as built today requires quite a few steps to complete. Efforts are being made to combine siding, sheathing and finishing in one operation.

Brevik indicated that molded plastics probably will become more important. These already are being used in molded sinks and countertops and molded tubs and enclosures. He said plastics are an approach to reducing construction costs.

Clean-Up Campaign Can Reduce Fires

How about fighting pollution in your own back yard? Dried-out brush, dead grass, old papers and other litter left by winter can all be breeding places for fire.

Clear it out, advised the National Fire Protection Association, so you won't give fire a place to start.

Prize Winning Pools show individual tastes. The four pools are the top winners in their respective residential classes in a national swimming pool design competition. The contests are sponsored each year by the National Swimming Pool Institute. The vinyl-liner pool, top left, is a gentle dog-leg design which illustrates the varied shapes of pools. The gazebo and attractive lawn furniture handsomely complement the woodland setting of the free-form concrete pool, upper right. Bottom left, the small wading pool or toddlers pool adds a valuable family accent to the pool, also a free-form concrete construction. The extensive brick deck and modern lines of the poolside enclosed patio house establish the elegance of the clean, oval lines of the pool, bottom right.

Bewildering Choice of Pools Offers Variety for Consumer

Those who may be planning this year to join the 4 million other Americans have their own home swimming pool will find a confusing array of pool types, size and shapes available.

Even the so-called "glamour pools" popular in Hollywood a generation ago have their counterparts in low-cost vinyl lined and concrete pools.

To help an interested prospect become aware of the possibilities within his budget and the many considerations of selecting, building and maintaining a pool, the National Swimming Pool Institute publishes several brochures.

Sizes Varied

A booklet of award winning inground pools honored each year in an industry design competition provides ideas on pools of all sizes and shapes in all budget ranges.

"How To Select Your Swimming Pool" is a brochure listing and explaining major considerations involved in a pool purchase. Everything from type, size and shape to location, taxes and building requirements is covered.

For those wanting to know more about what goes into the pool after it is built, "Residential Pool Care Guide" explains the procedures required for pool maintenance as well as cleaning procedures, chemical treatment and equipment checking.

Pool Painting

A separate publication — "Painting Your Pool" — is offered to deal specifically with this area of maintenance. Pool painting is an infrequent task which can be all but eliminated for years by routine proper care. Nonetheless, if your pool is now ready for a coat of paint, this booklet will be important to you.

"Minimum Standards for Residential Pools" treats the design and construction phases of the pool in great detail and would be of particular interest to those with an engineering mind planning to buy a pool package and build it themselves.

Writing the contract for the pool with the builder or dealer can be a very confusing part of the process. Yet it is an extremely important part of making the purchase and will probably play an important role in the ultimate satisfaction a buyer has in dealing with the builder.

Constipated Today?

You wouldn't be if—

...you realized that as you get older your system naturally slows down and the laxative you have been taking may no longer be best for you. So, if you've been taking magnesia, salts, oils or harsh chemical laxatives once a week or more and you're still not satisfied—here's a better way to end constipation worries. Take medically proven Serutan. It's different!

Unlike other laxatives that may cause irritation or griping, Serutan, taken daily, forms a soft gel which moistens food wastes and shapes them into a well-formed stool. Serutan produces the proper amount of bulk needed to help bring peristaltic stimulation to your sluggish colon. This is utterly different from forcing your system with harsh chemical laxatives which may dry you out. You can take gentle Serutan every day because it is a pure, non-irritating vegetable hydrogel and contains no harsh roughage, no chemical laxatives. Take Serutan every day to get regular—and keep regular.

PIN-WORMS CAN MAKE YOUR CHILD ITCHY, FIDGETY

Fidgeting, nose-picking, a tormenting rectal itch are often telltale signs of Pin-Worms, ugly parasites that medical experts say infest 1 out of every 3 persons examined. Entire families may be victims and not know it. To get rid of Pin-Worms, they must be killed in the large intestine where they live and multiply. That's exactly what Jayne's P-W tablets do... and here's how they do it:

First—a scientific coating carries the tablets into the bowels before they dissolve. Then—Jayne's modern, medically-approved ingredient goes right to work—kills Pin-Worms quickly, easily. Ask your pharmacist.

Don't take chances with dangerous, highly contagious Pin-Worms which infect entire families. When one member is infected, health authorities strongly advise that the entire family be treated at the same time. Gene Barry: Handsome Idol Who Makes Marriage Work

At first Gene Barry didn't even want to get into television. When Herb Gordon, ex-casting head at ZIV, suggested he play the title role in "Bat Masterson" in the late 1950s, Gene said, "No. Westerns are through!"

But Gordon persuaded him.

"What's so different about this one?"

"To start with, Bat wears a derby and carries a cane."

"That made me reconsider the project," Gene told me at lunch the other day. "It wasn't the cane and the hat in themselves that made Masterson unique but what they stood for and what they did for the character." And what that did for Gene.

It was he who started the wide lapels, colored shirts and vests that years later became so popular with young people. "When I get through with the last segment of this series," he plaintively insisted, "I will grow a beard and be sloppy. After 20 years of imagery, it's now time for my career to take a whole new turn."

Yet I wondered whether his complaint was justified. Because Barry is one of the few "complete entertainers" in show business. He has been on stage, in movies and night clubs. He has done one-man shows and has even emceed at county fairs. His album, "Gene Barry Sings of Love and Things," sold well both here and abroad.

It is only now, when he's nearly 50 (June 14, 1971) that Gene is slowing down. In fact, in talking with him I got the distinct impression that he has become bored with life and even, perhaps, with himself.

Part of the lethargic impression he conveys is due to a slight frown that gives him a somewhat ferocious and preoccupied countenance. Until he looks at you, that is. Then his hazel eyes bore into you, and he's totally aware of you.

When we were lunching together, I saw

Barry: five spats in 26 years the waitress nearly drop her tray when he gave her "The Look" and apologized for not having removed his napkin fast enough so she could put down his plate. It is his consideration, the small courtesies he displays so effortlessly, combined with his masculinity, that has endeared him to female viewers. He's every inch the suave hero, all six feet, one and a half inches of him, albeit a bit hunched, with a twinkle in his eye and a tug at the corner of his mouth that makes you think he's working on a polite—but secret—joke.

While Gene is sensitive, he is not sentimental. When he and Betty Kalb were married October 22, 1944, he left the selection of the hotel for their honeymoon up to Betty.

"Why me?" she wanted to know.

"Because I have to get back to work," he replied, and left.

Gene and Betty came together through a freak accident when they were both appearing in "Glad to See You." At the time, a lot of show people played baseball in Central Park every Sunday. Betty was hit on the head by a baseball and knocked out. "When I came to, Gene was picking me up. I thought I was dreaming. He looked so beautiful! We didn't see each other again until we both had lunch at Sardi's a few days later. He asked me for a date, and that night we decided to get married." She sighed. "I think he's better-looking now than he was when we got married. That's Barry with his daughter Liza: It is no secret that she can wind him around her little finger.

After 20 years of being considered one of the best-dressed, most suave and courteous figures in show business, the hero of "Name of the Game" wonders if it isn't time for his career to take a whole new turn.

the trouble with the world. Women get worse-looking as they grow older, but men get better-looking."

Until their first son Michael was born in 1946, Gene enjoyed New York. He was born there, studied to be a concert violinist until he broke his arm playing football in high school and turned to singing. This eventually took him into the musicals, "Rosalinda," "The Merry Widow" and "Glad to See You." They even had a nice Manhattan apartment on 56th St. and Seventh Ave., across the street from Carnegie Hall. "Then I began a run of bad luck in the theatre and could no longer afford a flat—any flat," Gene recalled. "We moved in with my parents."

By the end of 1949, however, Gene's career had regained its equilibrium. He began concentrating on acting and in 1951 signed a contract with Paramount that led to roles in such films as "Soldier of Fortune" with Clark Gable and "Thunder Road" with Robert Mitchum.

When I asked Gene how his marriage had managed to survive 26 years, he said, "I guess it has to do with a tremendous desire to make it work on both our parts and not let our egos or individual thoughts take over."

"I think the first few difficult years of adjustment helped tremendously because we realized how much we needed one another. You see, we didn't really know each other when we got married. In fact, we were total strangers. The first two years were the toughest of them all."

Said Betty, "I think a lot of it was luck. Besides, we had the same ambitions. I wanted him to be famous, and he wanted to be famous. Of course, we have a lot of other things in common, particularly our love for our children. If you are loved, you give love in return." Michael, now 25, is writing and directing his first motion picture. Fredrick is 18, a freshman at Colorado University. Liza, short for Elizabeth, is three and a half. Gene refers to her as "my little princess," and it is no secret that she can wind him around her little finger.

Betty insists she and Gene never fight in front of their children. "We always put up a united front. They've tried to get us on different sides, but it never worked. I think a lot of the insecurity kids feel today is due to an inner fear that someday their parents will break up—if they haven't already. Gene and I have yelled at each other maybe five times in all our 26 years of marriage.

She is very aware of what does and doesn't please Gene. For instance, I thought she looked very attractive in a gray sweater and black slacks, but she was worried that she'd received me without having had her hair done and her make-up on. "Gene wouldn't like it," she confessed. "He likes me all dolled up."

The Barrys now live in a new home in Beverly Hills which, says Betty, is smaller because their last house was too pretentious. The "smaller" one is still a mansion, even by Beverly Hills standards.

In spite of his being outspoken against the Vietnam war and runaway production in the moving picture industry (he's all for Government subsidization along the lines of England's subsidy for the arts), Gene is the quiet one in the family. Betty is gregarious. While Gene can appear completely lost in thought, Betty rarely takes time to catch her breath.

Gene is no longer the driving young man he was at the beginning of his Hollywood career. "My whole life was my work then," he explained, almost apologetically. "I hadn't realized that you only need so much money to live on. You don't scurry about so much later on. You want, first, with the family and time to do things you could never do before. Why shouldn't actors mature like everyone else? On the other hand, I am not all that settled or stable."

"I think I'd like to go back on the stage. I'd love to sweat again. I haven't for a long time. The only excitement in tv is making the pilot, seeing it get on the air and then waiting to find out whether it will succeed. If it does, then you're stuck in a hit show."

It would take a computer to count the actors who'd give their eyeteeth to get in that kind of a golden rut! ♦

Philippines' Colleages, Universities
In Dilemma—Too Good, Too Bad

By MORT ROSENBLUM
MANILA (AP) — Townsfolk in the north built a hospital recently but couldn't open it—no doctors. In one year 550 Filipino doctors went to the United States to practice.
The Smulu school system in the south, offered 12 teaching jobs and got 397 applicants. This spring 60,000 or so teachers will be looking for work.
That's the double-barreled college crisis here: the Philippines' 594 colleges and universities are too good and too bad.
The University of Santo Tomas, founded before Harvard, teaches specialist doctors so much they can't work here. Profit-hungry schools hand out diplomas to anyone who can scrape up the tuition. On top of that, thousands of graduates badly needed for available jobs leave the country every year rather than work at home. In 1969, 6,225 professionals went to the United States and many more went elsewhere. A young doctor in a provincial government clinic may earn $70 a month.
Filipino psychiatrists work in Nigeria, professors in Ethiopia. Scientists, technicians, musicians, from the Philippines can be found in many countries.

A government survey found the education imbalance staggering. The country needs 400 veterinarians a year but runs only one school in that field. Many engineering jobs go begging.
The government could limit enrollment in top-heavy subjects and stress weaker fields, phasing out unneeded colleges and bolstering vital ones. But education is free enterprise in this free-choice society.
The government could also find ways to entice—or force—graduates to stay at home and work in rural areas. That would cost money and face opposition. So far the government has had little success in regulating higher education. But something must be done fast, educators agree.
Drivers of colorful jeepneys, sometimes working 12 hours daily for less than $1, often hold college degrees. In this nation of 38 million, 553,000 students were enrolled in colleges last year.
A group of American educators, figuring out how to evaluate credit of Filipino students, named 34 institutions that meet at least minimum accreditation standards in the United States.
That leaves 554.
To keep costs down, schools often pack more than 80 students in a class, twice the government's minimum. They can offer a diploma for about $40 a year tuition and fees.
Often even government colleges provide poor quality education through faculty inertia and lack of funds, studies show. One American sociologist observed: "Many teachers want to leave things alone. If they make yabang... that's a Tagalog word meaning 'proud,' but it means stepping out of line. It's the very enemy of professional excellence."
Diploma-mill schools concentrate on commerce and education which need only chairs and a blackboard. One school has 5,000 students on a block-square campus.

"Nobody wants to venture into other fields," said the Rev. Leonardo Legaspi, rector of Santo Tomas, a 29,000-student school. He asserts specialization in technical fields would restore the balance.
The Jesuit-run Ateneo University spends nearly twice as much on educating a student as he pays in tuition.
One official figured every 2,000 departing professionals cost $15 million in lost expense. Central Bank authorities reply that they make it up by sending earnings home.
The American government is frequently accused of filching Filipino talent. The embassy denies any recruiting, but some feel that granting of priority visas to professionals is inducement enough.
Some specialists have no choice but to go overseas since no positions available in the Philippines command their skills.
Whatever the argument, some professionals who leave are needed at home. Finding an answer to that could be the key to unwinding the whole crisis.
With balance, professionals could leave, send money back home, and not feel guilty because there would be enough others in their fields to meet the

Federal Law Protects Breeders of Plants

BY STANLEY F. ROLLIN

The man in the street normally doesn't consider the breeder of a new variety of peas or soybeans as eligible for a special set of rights. But a new law gives breeders of certain new plants protection from having their "inventions" exploited by others.

The new law is known as the Plant Variety Protection Act and is being administered by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). Specifically, it covers varieties of plants which are reproduced sexually, that is through seeds. In this group are virtually all garden vegetables, crops such as wheat and soybeans, flowers, and various trees and shrubs. The law does not cover okra, celery, peppers, tomatoes, carrots, cucumbers, and hybrids of any kind.

Breeders of new and novel plants which are reproduced non-sexually, by budding or grafting, have been eligible for protection under the United States Patent Act since 1930. This latter group of plants includes roses and fruit trees.

Within the grain division of USDA's Consumer and Marketing Service is the new plant variety protection office which handles requests for certificates of protection from plant breeders. The office staff includes experts, called examiners, who search through reference material to make sure a variety is actually novel and thus eligible for a certificate of protection. The examiners make their decisions based on these findings. A decision by the examiner may be appealed by the plant breeder to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the federal courts.

The law lists three qualifications for a "novel variety". First, the variety must be distinct and differ from all known prior varieties by one or more characteristics. These features would include, for example, shape or color and resistance to disease.

Second, the variety must be uniform. Any variations appearing in the plants must be describable and predictable.

Third, the variety must be stable from generation to generation, remaining unchanged in its essential and distinctive characteristics.

Once a certificate of plant variety protection is issued the holder of that certificate may use federal courts to protect his rights. Infringement of the certificate holder's rights will occur, for example, if someone without authority sells the novel variety, exports it from the United States or sexually multiplies it as a step to selling it.

The protection is valid for 17 years.

The law could spur development of plant breeding by private industry. Since protection was not previously available to breeders of new varieties of these plants, few private companies could afford the expense necessary to develop a new variety.

Now the developer of a new type of soybean, for example, can prevent others from exploiting his discovery. The breeder will be able to sell the seed of the variety or sell his rights to reproduce the variety and thus receive compensation for the expense of his variety development.

Government agencies eventually may give up much responsibility for developing new varieties and turn to more basic research. The end result could be an increase in plant breeding outside of government and more pure plant research within the government.

Chilton City Hall Gets Face-Lifting

BY ALICE CONNORS
Post-Crescent Correspondent

CHILTON — Rejuvenation of the grounds surrounding the city hall here got a late start last fall after years of debate. Work will be completed early this spring.

The city council pondered the rejuvenation of the grounds for many years, before being forced to take action two years ago when it was apparent that four stately elm trees near the city hall were stricken with Dutch Elm disease and had to be destroyed.

The trees provided the large old building with shade for many years and when they were removed the building looked barren.

To replace the shrubs two Coloneli Buckthorn were planted on each side of the building. A Dorra Juniper were then planted between the Buckthorn and sod was placed along a sidewalk.

A Potentilla Jackman was planted along a far corner of the structure.

The shrubs were chosen by the landscaper because they offset the high appearance of the building and are easily cared for. The large emerald Queen Maple was planted in front of the building.

The entire program was approved by the city council at a cost of $987.

A landscaper from Darboy was consulted before shrubs and trees were planted again on the grounds. He developed a plan to beautify the area Emerald Queen Maples were planted to replace the elms which had lined the west side of the building near the parking lot.

Old high-bush shrubbery which had begun to show years of weathering was removed from in front of the structure.

1971 Brightly Colored Bathroom Fixtures Began at Worlds Fair

Colored bathroom fixtures can be traced to the 1902 World's Fair in Buffalo, New York.

Vases with colored glazes were displayed at the fair. Then manufacturers started to apply decorations to lavatory pitchers and bowls, and finally to tubs, lavatories and water closets. By 1929, one manufacturer could boast that he was supplying fixtures in 18 colors, according to the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau.

Proper Home Landscaping Requires Careful Planning

BY V. W. PEROUTKY
Winnebago Agricultural Agent

OSHKOSH — The design in home landscaping technically is an art and only an architect in this field is qualified. There are three basic outdoor areas; the approach or public area; the private or outdoor living area; and the service area. The open lawn areas, trees, border and foundation plantings, shrubs, flowers, and even the vegetable and fruit growing gardens fit into this.

Trees should be planted for a purpose, with shrub planting simple. Yard borders may be decorated with flowers, and if a patio is built — it should be easily accessible and useful. Well landscaped home grounds provide extra beauty, and create more comfort for family living and enjoyment.

Shade Trees Important
A home without shade trees is like a picture out of a frame. The Norway Maple family is light to pass through than most popular. The regular Norway Maple has yellow leaves in fall. The late fall, Crimson King has red leaves, an excellent background color contrast tree. Emerald Queen, Red and Scarlet maples also are available.

Marshall's Seedless Ash, and Autumn Purple Ash often are recommended. They will tolerate wet soil, but no tree will tolerate consistent flooding. Littleleaf and Redmond Linden also are good shade trees. Thornless and seedless honey locusts are suggested such as the Imperial and Skyline varieties, stakes forming an "H".

Pin Oak may be a wise choice where oak are growing naturally.

As a young tree, the Common Hackberry may be mistaken for American elm, it has interesting bark.

Planting the tree poses dangers, however, because a twig fungus, Witches Broom, may be a problem especially in a series of damp seasons or near a lake. Better and rated high are the Seedless Ash, Autumn Purple Ash and Marshall's Seedless Ash both are excellent. They will tolerate heavy wet soil, and grow fast.

Recent spring surface floodings will be accepted by the Lindens. Littleleaf Linden and Redmond Linden are suggested as top varieties. Several good Thornless and Seedless Honey Locusts are available. Imperial Honey Locust and Skyline Honey Locust are good varieties. These locusts rate highly because they allow more sunlight to pass through than most popular. The regular Norway Maple has yellow leaves in fall. The late fall, Crimson King has red leaves, an excellent background color contrast tree. Emerald Queen, Red and Scarlet maples also are available.

Marshall's Seedless Ash, and Autumn Purple Ash often are recommended. They will tolerate wet soil, but no tree will tolerate consistent flooding. Littleleaf and Redmond Linden also are good shade trees. Thornless and seedless honey locusts are suggested such as the Imperial and Skyline varieties, stakes forming an "H".

Generally one-third of the limbs should be removed at transplant time. Care must be taken, however, for the leader especially should not be cut back in maple, oak and birch. Cuts of more than an inch in diameter should be covered with a tree seal, not tar or other petroleum products.

Among evergreens, pines usually require full sun; spruce will tolerate some shade. Yews do best in shade. Native cedar do well in heavy soil under wet or dry conditions. Junipers will take dry soils and grow best in full sun. Austrian pine is a favorite. Black Hills Spruce leads in the landscape spruces.

Improper Planting
Shrubs are important but often homeowners overplant them, or too small or too large a variety is planted for a particular site.

Low type shrubs suggested are Japanese Barberry, Crimson Pigmy, Korean Boxwood, Cranberry Cotoneaster, Clave Honey-suckle, Fragrant Sumac, and Snowberry.

Medium size shrubs which grow well here are Red Chokeberry, Cream Edge Dogwood, Peking and Spreading Cotoneaster, Winterberry, Sargeant Crabapple, Rugosa Roses and Korean early Lilac.

Taller shrubs fit better along lot borders or may be used to shield or obstruct an undesirable view. Carefully located tall shrubs may be better than a tree close to the house or other building. Serviceberry, or Junberry, is a favorite. Others are the Viburnums such as Nannyberry, American Cranberry and Arrowhead which all have leaf color in fall. Cotoneaster, Burning Bush, Dogwoods, Lilacs and Buckthorn also are popular.

Lone Children Face Dangers of Accidental Fire

Do the first touches of spring bring a restless urge to get out of the house — to share a cup of coffee with a neighbor, to do a bit of shopping, or run a quick errand?

Go ahead — but don't leave small children alone in the house while out, cautions the National Fire Protection Association.

Hundreds of children are killed by fire each year because parents gambled that nothing would happen while they were away "for just a few minutes."

The shocking fact is that one child out of every three who die in fires is alone and helpless when the fire strikes.

Often, NFPA studies show, it's the youngsters themselves who start the fire — playing with matches, turning on kitchen ranges to "cook," accidentally tipping over space heaters.

Small children are helpless in the face of such situations.

Whenever tempted to run off for "just a few minutes" without the children, don't. Take them along, or leave them home with a competent older family member or baby-sitter.

Beets Remain Fresh in Nature's storehouse. Beets buried last fall still are fresh because protective snow-falls early during the winter season insulated the ground and kept severe frost from damaging the vegetables. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Planting Greenery Answer To Ills of Environment?

The saying, "a little knowledge is dangerous," seems appropriate to the growing awareness and concern about environmental problems by individual Americans, as the awareness and concern seem to cause frustration.

Now the American Association of Nurserymen has started a campaign which they say will aid the environment.

"Green Survival," is the name of the campaign. The aim of the program is to promote individual action. To the average person, the environmental problem seems so large in scope he feels hopeless in moving from the level of concern to action.

National Campaign The Nurserymen claim there is more that an individual can do than switching to returnable bottles and using unleaded gas.

There's a lot more he can do, they say, either on his own or in cooperation with neighbors, fellow businessmen or members of civic and fraternal organizations.

One of the most effective fighters of pollution is the existence of plant life. Everyone can start a personal campaign of planting more trees, shrubs, ground covers or vines.

Noise Reduction
Plant a row of arbor vitae along the rear property line to reduce the noise level from a street.

Plant a shade tree here and there throughout the yard to catch the pollutants in the air and hold them until you can hose them into the ground.

Talk with neighbors about trying to get a few trees planted along the street to add some beauty to the neighborhood.

Talk to the men at the office about taking that vacant lot behind the warehouse and turning it into a small park for the relaxation of employees and neighborhood residents. Talk to club members about closing a few blocks of the downtown areas to automobiles and turning the street into a mall filled with trees and shrubs that will clear the air and release fresh oxygen into it, urge nurserymen.

The average American who is willing to invest a little extra time and money — and who might be able to exert some leadership with his friends and colleagues — may very well be one of America's greatest hopes for catching up with and overtaking the deterioration of the environment.

Green Retreats
The association, the trade organization of the nursery industry, advocates the creation of "micro-environments" where Americans can withdraw when they feel the pressures of urban life becoming too intense. The most obvious place for these retreats is in the backyard or gardens of private homes. But they can also be on the roofs of mid-city office buildings or apartment houses, in the courtyards nestled between skyscrapers and adjacent to a factory, a warehouse or a new car dealership. They even can be indoors, using live plant material to bring the outdoors inside.

The association, through its annual Landscape Awards Program, paid tribute last year to a church in the center of New York City that had created a garden reminiscent of an oriental meditation garden to give Manhattan office workers and residents a place where they can temporarily get away from the tensions of the city.

The year before a bank in Charleston, N.C., received an award for taking leadership in restoring part of downtown Charleston to the quiet, gracious atmosphere of an earlier century.

Greenery Acts as a sound barrier. A row of trees or tall shrubs planted closely together will reduce sound in backyards limiting the noises from nearby streets, school grounds or industrial areas.

Greenery Can Buffer Level Of Noises

Both inside the home and out the noise level of American society seems to be increasing. Fast-moving traffic, sirens, supersonic booms, industrial machinery and the noise of jet engines combine to produce constant challenge to tranquility.

Yet one of nature's greatest resources offers help in limiting noise according to the American Association of Nurserymen. It is the simple, green leaf. Among other achievements the leaf has the ability to act as a noise baffle, deflecting sound waves, changing their direction and reducing their intensity.

Highway planners have become increasingly conscious of this factor. They have learned that mass plantings of hedges, trees and shrubs, grass and vines can reduce the noise of heavy traffic by as much as 60 per cent.

The noise level above a wide expanse of concrete can be reduced as much as threefold if the concrete surface is broken up by plantings.

Buffer planting also can reduce noise adjacent to airports and industrial sites. And it can be incorporated into the landscape design of homes.

It's a Late Harvest. Appleton mailman Harvey Salzman, 2304 N. Division St., digs carrots from his garden. The carrots remained fresh in the soil over winter because heavy snows kept hard frost from penetrating the soil. Salzman raises his garden organically, without the aid of agricultural chemicals. New London Baptists Pitch in to Build Church

BY KARL HAMMERBURG
Post-Crescent New London Bureau

NEW LONDON — To most people the expression "the congregation is building a new church," means members of the congregation are financing a new building. For the congregation of Faith Baptist Church the expression means that they are doing actual construction of the building.

The congregation, with the help of other pastors and missionaries, has almost completed their new church at the corner of Nassau and Cameron Streets.

Building Design
The building is a combination of concrete block and frame building, with some brick facing. It is built on a steep slope, allowing the lower portion to serve as a ground level accessible floor, while the top level has the same non-stairway accessibility.

Two of the principals in the construction of the church are the Rev. Homer Baker and Arley Todd, both combination carpenter-missionaries for the Hiawatha Mission. They have directed most of the construction, helped plan the building, and do the finishing work on the building.

The men attend to construction of the pews being custom crafted, for the specific church, building of steeples and other finishing work.

Their craftsmanship is equal to that of any master craftsman, and as pastor Baker said "quarter round and chalk are for amateur builders."

Painstaking care is taken in transporting and using Baker's tools. He has a tandem trailer, which carries routers, table saws and table sanders from job to job. Baker lives in a camper on a pickup truck he uses to pull the trailer.

Most of Baker's tools are fairly new, replaced after a fire destroyed most of his equipment. Congregations from throughout the Hiawatha area purchased new equipment and the trailer for him.

Total Effort
The men of the congregation have been doing the roughing work and installing ceiling panels, while women come in and help stain and finish woodwork. The Rev. John Catlin, Berglund, Mich., has been doing the electrical work, which then is inspected by the utility company.

The Rev. Gerben Veldt, pastor of the New London congregation, and another carpenter on the job, explained the project. "This enables us in small works to have a building, because we don't have the labor costs." Since the entire church and furniture are being built, the congregation will save an estimated 50 to 60 per cent of costs.

"We don't have a lot of lost time or motion, they know what is needed and when," Veldt noted of Baker and Todd. Another person who helped was Veldt's brother-in-law, who came over for a week and plastered the ceilings on the upper floor.

The first level of the building contains a fellowship hall and can be used for open concept Sunday School classes. The ceiling is suspended tile with built in lighting. A kitchen in one corner will serve for congregational fellowship dinners.

First Floor
The sanctuary on the first floor is 120-by 140-feet with rich paneling and indirect lighting onto a white plaster ceiling. There is a paneled nursery in the front, and a large foyer. Double doors with stained glass effect are located on the Cameron Street side of the building.

The congregation plans to dedicate their new building on May 20, with an open house on May 23. Pastor Veldt noted, however, that there seems to be more to do all the time. He said when construction gets to the finishing point the work becomes more tedious and exacting.

"We have had good cooperation from the congregation," Veldt concluded.

The results will be a new church, for a small congregation, at far less than normal costs. "The church the congregation built."

The Rev. Gerben Veldt, pastor at Faith Baptist Church, watches as the Rev. Homer Baker, Hiawatha Mission, demonstrates the fit of parts he has made for the hymnal racks on the Faith Baptist Church pews. The building of the church is a congregational project. (Post-Crescent Photo)

Treated Seed Hikes Yields, Demands Careful Handling

Man's knowledge of how to keep seeds healthy has progressed a long way since the Middle Ages, when seeds were thrown through fires to control disease organisms.

Today seeds are treated with chemicals to prevent damage by insects, fungi and bacteria. Such treatment poses dangers, however, if the seeds are used improperly.

Most chemicals used for treating seed, such as phenol, mercury acetate, are harmful to bacteria or fungi but also are potentially harmful to animals or humans.

Federal Regulations
The Federal Seed Act is designed to protect individuals from misuse of treated seed which could cause fatal results.

The act requires that all seeds treated with mercurials and other toxic substances be carefully labeled. The label must state the name of the substance the seed is treated with—either the commonly accepted name, chemical name or a standard abbreviation of the chemical name.

Some seeds carry the label BHC, the standard abbreviation for benzene hexachloride, the chemical name.

Abbreviations Explained
Names and abbreviations of the chemicals are available in many publications, including one entitled, "Requirements Under the Federal Seed Act for Labeling Treated Seed."

The publication is available from the seed branch of the United States Department of Agriculture's grain division at the Agricultural Research Center in Beltsville, Md.

Although lawn seeds are not ordinarily treated many vegetable seeds such as sweet corn are treated with toxic substances to help insure successful growth, according to the USDA.

Labeling A Must
A label for treated seed must contain a caution statement besides the names of chemicals. Mercurials and similarly toxic substances must be labeled with the word "POISON" in red letters and with a skull-and-crossbones label.

Other substances, classified "harmful," in regulations are required to be labeled with a statement such as "Do not use for food, feed or oil purposes." Federal law requires that food must be colored an unnatural color.

Lavatory Vanities Fit Into Bathroom

Many new bathrooms being installed these days have vanity lavatories in which the bowl is set into a wide countertop, with storage space beneath. According to the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau, such "furniture" also is growing in popularity for the bedroom. They come in so many styles that they fit into the room's overall decor very nicely.

Home gardeners should follow six steps to avoid misuse of treated seed, according to the Consumer and Marketing Service, the arm of the USDA which administers the Federal Seed Act.

The USDA recommendations urge gardeners to:

- Carefully read and heed labels when buying seed.
- Buy only the amount of treated seed necessary, or treat with chemicals only the amount of seed to be used.
- Place treated seed in containers marked "POISON" and identify these as containing treated seeds.
- Don't reuse bags or containers which previously held treated seeds or were used in treating seeds with chemicals. —Don't store treated seeds with animal feed, or in places accessible to livestock or children.

—Destroy unused seeds immediately to prevent their use as livestock feed or human food. Burying small amounts of treated seed deep into the ground is a good way of disposing of them.

Proper Drainage Key to Successful Landscaping Plan

Insuring good drainage is the first step toward a successful landscape plan, emphasized Kenneth Schmalz, a Darboy landscaper, discussing landscap-

Fence Can Double as Storage Unit

A storage fence often can combine two jobs, gracefully marking property lines while providing a garage for the rake and lawnmower.

The design actually is a fence with an attached tool house which functions and appears as part of the fence.

Although size is determined largely by available space, it's smart to stretch for every inch possible because a storage fence quickly becomes a favorite spot for stashing—all manner of things. Even snow tires and paint supplies may sneak in.

Try for a minimum three-foot depth and 12-foot length, and there'll be room for most garden gear.

Inside, hooks care for the small implements and shelves taken packaged pesticides and weed killers. A shelf can be built of two-inch-thick planks as a work bench. Ideally the shelf should be built at a 30-inch height, 18 inches wide and three feet long.

Several features are basic to construction of the storage unit, including double doors to let heavy equipment roll through easily. Standard stud walls are the best choice, sheathed and covered with solid lumber siding to provide full weather protection. A finished interior helps by adding a layer of protection and presenting a clean, neat appearance.

For a quick interior treatment, nail up rough boards — cedar, fir or pine. No finish is needed, but a coat of semi-transparent stain in a golden beige shade pleases the eye and keeps the unit's interior sunny looking.

A sloped, shingled roof with gutter and downspouts helps insure a tight, dry interior. Concrete should be poured over a vapor barrier to form a floor.

ing problems in a class for homeowners at Fox Valley Technical Institute-Appleton.

"Make sure the water is going to run," he said. Few places are flat and most lots must be graded or run-off water will cause problems," he said.

Ideally landscape architects and building architects should work together planning a structure and grounds, said Schmalz. With such a unified program the structure and grounds can be blended in a single theme.

Cost of Landscaping
He said many landowners do not plan exteriors nor anticipate costs involved in landscaping. "When you come to your outside it's kind of an afterthought."

Often when prospective homeowners borrow funds for a house landscaping is neglected. "It's the last thing people think of."

He warned against attempting to build a house in some rural wooded areas. Many times such areas have a high water table which halts construction and successful placement of septic systems.

High Water
"You'll find that your water table will be up to four feet," he said. Basswood, elm and soft maple may be growing in such soggy soil, he said.

After a proper grade is created, good lawns should be established as the next step in a landscaping plan.

When a lawn is protecting soils from erosion, trees may be placed on lots. "Trees are essential," said Schmalz.

Homeowners creating a landscape plan must learn the characteristics of trees and shrubs they will be using. "You've got to know the tools," said Schmalz, calling trees the tools of a landscaper.

He advised against planting most pines in the Fox Valley pine, because they usually grow best in well-drained, sandy soils.

Use of spruce, fir, or cedar offers a variety of evergreens which can be successfully used. The success of plantings may depend largely on their placement, he said. Trees planted on the west and south sides of structures usually have less chance of thriving than if planted on east or northern sides of buildings.

As finishing touches homeowners may plant secondary decorations such as flowers and erect rock gardens, fountains, or swimming pools.

Intense Lights Spur Plant Development

An experiment which started Buck claimed plant growth with a new artificial light chamber in a Cleveland greenhouse may pave the way for use of high intensity discharge light to grow plants.

The chamber, installed by greenhouse owner Richard Pretzer, to produce from 3,000 to 3,200 lettuce seedlings used the high intensity discharge lighting.

Tests indicated the lighting could have a "significant influence on the agricultural industry," according to J. A. Buck, a lighting engineer of the General Electric Lamp Division, speaking at the annual meeting of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers.

Seedlings Boosted
The chamber produced from 3,000 to 3,200 lettuce seedlings in each of 24 three-by-seven-foot trays in just two weeks.

Normally the plants would have taken 45 days to reach the same stage of development had sunlight been the only lighting source.

The growth room using high intensity discharge lights produces more light with fewer lamps and fixtures than fluorescent systems, according to reports.

Caution Pays During Spring Painting Time

Water-base paints have taken a lot of the fire hazards out of spring clean-up paint jobs, but it's still essential to know what you are using, according to the National Fire Protection Association.

For safety's sake, always read the label on the container when you are working with paint thinners, solvents and removers. Safest to use are those labeled non-combustible or non-flammable. The next best choice has "Caution — Combustible" on the label. Avoid any marked "Warning — Flammable" and "Danger — Extremely Flammable" if you can possibly find a satisfactory substitute.

With products carrying the flammable warning, use only in a place well ventilated and well removed from open flames or operating electric heaters and other sources of ignition. Observe the no-smoking rule.

Store these materials in tightly capped metal cans — never glass jars — and place them in a cool spot.

When using oil-base paints, linseed oil, turpentine or varnishes, be careful with oily rags. Dispose of them promptly and safely outside or, if you must store them, place in a tightly covered metal can.

Chemical Power To Replace Plow?

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

One of these days you may be able to discard your garden plow if a developing method of planting called no-till or no-plow pans out.

Plowing is not eliminated completely. Chemical power is substituted in a large measure for horse power. As farmers know, tilling is a time-consuming chore in conventional planting.

Series of Tests

Here is how no-till works. A cut about two and one-half inches wide and a few inches deep is all the plowing necessary. Herbicides play an important role and mulching is another factor, using winter rye, alfalfa or even last year's cornstalks as cover crops.

There have been quite a number of test plots. In Columbia County of New York State last summer, corn was planted in a Craryville alfalfa field, a rye field, a field of chopped corn stalks and a conventional plowed area.

No-Till Cushions Drought
The farm owners reported no significant difference in yields from the various plots. There was, however, considerable labor saving.

The Columbia County Extension Agent, Kenneth Piester, said last season was excellent for growing and he figured the no-till method would show up much better in a dry year because unplowed sod holds water.

A number of machines, some home-made, have been developed that do virtually all the jobs at once, after a field is treated with herbicide to kill the cover crop.

The dead cover crop provides the mulch, which retards water run-off, decreases erosion and, Piester said.

blade digs a narrow trench. A covering blade follows fertilizer application, then the seed drops in front of another, covering knife. A sprayer applies herbicide or other treating chemicals.

Fast Operation
Four duplicate attachments permit planting four rows simultaneously.

The dead cover crop provides the mulch, which retards water run-off, decreases erosion and, Piester said.

Do You Want Your Carpets REALLY CLEAN?

See Laydwell's New Deep Steam Extraction Carpet Cleaning Method!

1. Does professional carpet cleaning get carpets really clean?

LAYDWEL STEAM METHOD

Yes. Laydwell's steam cleaning method actually removes the soil from both the pile and the backing of the carpet.

OLD SHAMPOO METHOD

No. All shampoo methods appear to clean because the harsh scrubbing brushes push dirt particles and detergents down into the pile where they are not easily seen.

2. Will cleaning the carpet harm it in any way?

No. Laydwell's steam method uses no brushes, scrubbing action or harsh chemicals, and all dirt is removed.

Yes. All shampoo methods use harsh scrubbing brushes which push dirt into carpet backing, causing excessive wear.

3. Will the texture of the carpet be damaged in any way?

No. Laydwell's steam method uses a powerful extraction to lift matted pile and restore the texture of the carpet.

Yes. All shampoo methods use harsh scrubbing action which frays carpet pile and detergent residue left in carpet leaves pile matted down.

4. Will the carpet take a long time to dry?

No. Laydwell's steam method penetrates only to carpet backing and powerful extraction removes excess moisture with the soil, insuring faster drying.

Yes. All shampoo methods apply water and detergents to the carpet. This excess moisture, detergent and dirt is not removed, causing a longer drying time.

5. After professional cleaning, will the carpet stay clean as long as it did when it was new?

Yes. Laydwell's steam method removes soil and leaves no sticky residue to attract more soil, thus carpet stays cleaner longer.

No. All shampoo methods leave the soil and detergent residue in the carpet, thus each cleaning leaves more residue attracting more soil faster.

6. Will professional carpet cleaning really extend the life of the carpet?

Yes. Laydwell's steam method is gentle and thorough leaving no dirt particles to cut the pile, causing wear.

No. All shampoo methods can shorten the life of the carpet because harsh brushes and detergents cause soil to go deeper into the carpet where carpet fibers are damaged.

Laydwell is proud to be the FIRST in this area with Deep Steam Cleaning of Carpets. Call NOW for FREE ESTIMATES. 733-2565.

New London Couple Build 'Installment Plan' House

BY KARL HAMMERBERG
Post-Crescent Correspondent

NEW LONDON — While the "installment plan" is an accepted way of life in America, a new approach to the philosophy is being exercised south of this community.

Mr. and Mrs. Barry Hammerberg have taken the installment approach to the construction of their home. The unique structure is built on two levels of the limestone ledge that borders New London to the south.

Because of the unique lay of the land, and the fact that their home is designed to their ideas, hobbies, and needs, the Hammerbergs are doing most of their own construction, with the exception of some basic framing done by a local carpenter.

Section Approach

The home is framed up in sections, and the section completed before another portion is started. This enables the family, Barry, Barbara and their daughter Nicole Leah, to live comfortably in part of the home, while continuing to build the rest.

Another advantage to this plan is that tools and the work are in the same area, and work can continue whenever spare time allows.

The home was designed by Barry, Barbara, and a local architect, Henry Miles, using the Hammerberg's ideas, to utilize the entire lay of the land, and blend into the natural beauty of the limestone cliffs.

Unique Structure

It is unique in many respects, including the fact that it depicts the personality of the family that lives in it, and that most of the work is being done by the family.

The portion now being lived in is nearly completed. It will be

The entire home is heated with oil fired hot water, zoned to the various areas of the home. The main lighting is on low voltage controls, with controls in each bedroom for bathroom lights, hall lights, entrance lights, as well as the main room light, all with multi-room control. An additional feature is a "panic button" which turns on all outside lighting with the push of one button.

Control Unit

The electrical work is being done by Barry and inspected by a local electrician. The main control board is located in the garage.

The garage is on the same level as the bedroom section, and features a stone wall, built by using stone from a quarry on the Hammerberg property. Barbara is responsible for the stone work, as far as the layout goes, with Barry doing the masonry.

The rest of the exterior is done in vertical cedar siding. The front entrance-way is a double door featuring a modern "H" in a velvetized finish.

Cedar Ceiling

The ceiling of the hallway is done with cedar shingles and has built in spotlights on swivel mounts and pointed to the walls, displaying various handicrafts made by the Hammerbergs, relatives, and other local artists.

The hallway, and at least one wall in the bedrooms are unusual. They are made of a vinyl-covered composition board and all can serve as bulletin boards, making displays on the walls as flexible as the entire home.

Large closets and bright colors are featured throughout the home, giving it an easy "lived-in" feeling.

Barbara notes just two problems with living in the home while it is under construction.

Rhododendrons Receive Aid From USDA

WASHINGTON — Rhododendrons are getting a helping hand from the United States Department of Agriculture.

The flowers are subject to Phytophthora root rot — a disease which has proved difficult as well as costly to control.

Now the agriculture department has decided to spend $45,000 for a three-year study by an Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center project. Dr. Harry A. H. Hootink, a plant pathologist will be placed on the track of the disease.

The purpose of the study is to breed a new kind of Rhododendron which is resistant to the disease. Before this can be done genetic characteristics of existing varieties must be screened. When positive characteristics are discovered attempts can be made to breed new varieties.

Plant pathologist Dr. Charles L. Wilson, Delaware, Ohio, will represent the agricultural research service.

While both of the Hammerbergs are busy with the construction of the home, and to constantly be where she doesn't belong.

Before moving into the structure the couple lived in a small building on the grounds which they remodeled into a very livable "summer home." The building will continue to be used as a place to entertain and a guest house in the summer.

Barry is a Rotary Club member and presently is serving on a committee working with professional procurement. Barbara is a member of the New London Junior Woman's Club and was recently nominated for a creative homemaker award.

'Cooking,' Can Kill Nematodes

Home gardeners in the Fox Valley may someday be using "cooked" soil for their potted plants.

Two researchers have used high power microwave energy to kill nematode eggs in larvae in soil used for potted plants. The microwave energy killed the eggs and larvae in seconds.

One day the microwave treatment may offer a suitable alternative to steam and chemical treatments for pasturizing potted soils, according to research reports.

Federal Project

The researchers, nematologists John H. O'Bannon and Joseph M. Good, Beltsville, Md., did the study for the Agricultural Research Service of the United States Department of Agriculture.

They used a small home type microwave oven to conduct two series of treatments on greenhouse-composted soil that was infested with root-knot nematode eggs and larvae.

In one series of experiments 90 cubic centimeters of screened soil with 11 per cent moisture was divided into 30 petri dishes 1.7 centimeters deep and covered with lids.

Process Studied

During the second series 400 cubic centimeters of soil at 13 and into bodies of water per cent moisture was placed in annually in the United States. Systematic planting of trees, shrubs, and grass can prevent a large percentage of this loss.

Chemicals Still Needed to Kill Tough Weeds

While most weeds die under preventive pre-emergence kill-leaf weeds is when they are regular mowing, there are stubborners that keep crab grass from growing rapidly. Proper Drainage Crucial to Success Of Potted Plants

Finding a proper soil mix for house plants is relatively easy, although there are some qualifications. Variations found in soil mixes at retail stores probably are due to occur because the soils are from different areas of the country, according to L. M. Berninger, University of Wisconsin, extension floriculturist. He said producers of soil mixes are trying to arrive at a blend that drains rapidly.

Usual Mixture

Rapid drainage is the most important factor in a good soil mix. Water should drain within 30 seconds. If it remains on the surface, this generally indicates the soil has become compact, although there may be other reasons. The result is poor root development and poor plant growth.

A common soil formula utilizes about three parts soil, one part peat moss and one part perlite. These are available separately or in combination at garden supply and retail stores. Berninger said there may be substitutions, but the basic blend produces a very light weight material.

This is most satisfactory for nearly all foliage plants.

There are two specialty soil mixes, he said. The most common is for African violets. These plants thrive in a mix having rather high organic content with an approximate 50-50 blend of soil and peat moss.

At the other extreme is a plant mix designed for cactus and succulent plants which come from areas where the soil is sandy and drainage is excellent. The mix is almost 50-50 soil and sand. Perlite may be substituted for sand.

Two-Tone Faucet Shows Temperature

One of the newest things in single-control faucets is one in which you dial red for hot water and blue for cold. For in-between temperatures, both colors are visible. The user dials the temperature he wants before pulling the dial to turn on the water. The faucet is thus a water-saver, the Plumbing Heating-Cooling Information Bureau says, because water temperature is apparent and does not need testing.

Weeds, Wood, Flowers, Merge in Delicate Design

BY KARL HAMMERBERG

Post-Crescent Correspondent

HORTONVILLE — The combination of weeds, dried flowers, and old wood doesn't sound like much, but the person willing to take some time, and apply some talent, can make some unusual and beautiful arrangements out of the natural material.

Mrs. Raymond Kuhn, Main St., Hortonville, has made a hobby of working with dried straw flowers, dried weeds and driftwood, as well as some weathered wood.

"My main interest is with driftwood," she noted, "but the two seem to go together." The greatest advantage of the hobby is the fact that it never becomes routine or dull.

Plans for Arrangement

Mrs. Kuhn explained the steps to making an arrangement.

—Study the size, space determines many displays. The container also will regulate the type of display to be made.

—If the arrangement is to be high or vertical, establish the height first. If it is to be short, set the width limit first. This establishes the slope and design.

"The line is the foundation of all design," Mrs. Kuhn emphasized.

Use variety and varying lengths, and then fill in. "Above all, keep the arrangement simple," she urged, "if loaded, the arrangement loses its individuality."

To keep from loading an arrangement Mrs. Kuhn recommended use of not more than three kinds of material. Curved and graceful branches can be used, unusual pieces can make up the base of the display.

In using driftwood the creator must decide whether or not the wood will be the featured part of the display, or a background. If it is to be featured, the designer should use less material around the wood.

"For the beginner, making a dried arrangement is an easy and interesting way to learn to make arrangements," Mrs. Kuhn said. "If you cut a stem too short, you can lengthen it with a piece of wire. You can't do that with a fresh cut flower."

To work with driftwood, the wood should be cleaned, by scrubbing. A putty knife or jackknife and steel scrub brush will prove handy for cleaning the wood.

Weeds are dried by hanging, the stem as it dries. If a curved stem is needed, set weeds standing in a jar as they dry.

If she is going to use thistles, Mrs. Kuhn will drop a few drops of shellac into the globe of the plant, holding the aerial seeds together.

Timing Important

The straw flowers or any other type of flower that is going to be dried for later use, must be picked in its prime.

"You can't wait, or you will have nothing," Mrs. Kuhn emphasized.

Figurines sometimes are shown in Mrs. Kuhn's arrangements, however there is a prerequisite. "It has to fit and tell a story when used with driftwood," she said.

The wood is used in its natural form, with only an occasional piece waxed. Few are painted. The flowers also are arranged with their own color and no other coloring is used on them.

Work Area Expands

The area a person works in isn't important, however, if the hobby grows, as Mrs. Kuhn's has, a person will find a need for a workshop. Hers is in the basement of their home. The table has adequate lighting for the close work she does, and the entire area has shelves to store the arrangements until they are used.

For Mrs. Kuhn the hobby has grown until where she is in demand to talk to various organizations. She presents programs on how to make the arrangements, and on driftwood to clubs and church groups.

Her love for flowers and beauty have drawn her into groups such as the Wolf River Garden Club and the YMCA home and garden club. She also expresses her artistic talents by painting.

Watch Fire Hazards

Three storage areas of the home — attic, basement and closets — are where 16 per cent of all dwelling fires begin, says the National Fire Protection Association.

Fire Drills Hike Safety For Families

Spring brings a chance to take a new lease on life. That lease on life — for you and your family — will be more certain if you've planned and practiced a family fire drill.

This is another kind of spring clean-up action — cleaning up any misunderstandings about what to do if fire should strike your home, says the National Fire Protection Association.

So plan and practice today — for a safer tomorrow.

Here are pointers for your plan:

1. Carefully figure out at least two routes to the outside from every room in the house, especially bedrooms. Allow for blocking of stairways or halls by fire.

2. Particularly for nighttime fires, remember that closed bedroom doors will hold back flame and smoke, allow extra time for escape or rescue.

3. For upper floor escape, use any available porch and garage roofs and ladders as ways down to safety. Be sure exit windows work easily, and are low and large enough to get through.

4. Pick an outside assembly point where the family will meet for a "roll-call," and be sure everyone knows the rule "once out — stay out."

5. Know how to call the fire department, by street box or neighbor's phone, and do this as quickly as the house is clear of people.

6. Plan who will look out for infants and the infirm, and how. Once your plans are made, it's important for all the family — including the children — to rehearse them carefully and regularly.

Shelves Answer to Wall Decoration

A huge wall presents a challenge when redecorating. Furniture design and the purpose of a room dictates the basic floor plan but walls permit room for versatile decorative ideas. Original use of shelves often may be the answer to providing attractive wall decoration. The most difficult walls are windowless ones, or without fireplace or beams to lead the way — a huge expanse of unrelieved wall space. How to make them interesting and decorative is a challenge. Many choose wallpaper which introduces pattern but with a large wall, the design of the paper can take over. One of the best solutions is to use a mixed bag of tricks. A darker color of paint shrinks the wall, bringing it optically down to size. The next step is to break up the space with various decorative elements. For instance, shelves. Versatile Answer There are many types on the market from the well known systems to the little specials from local lumber yards or from glass cutters. One firm widely known for its range of wall accessories now is offering solid oak shelves with decorative brackets in both formal and informal styles. Shelves of course are not just accessories should be sketched in. Be sure to sketch in the furniture that goes against the wall, otherwise good balance can't be achieved. Another very good method, and not necessarily a replacement for sketches, is to lay the shelves and accessories in the planned groupings right on the floor. This can save both time and labor, and gives room for experimentation. "Instant Groupings" can be formed and mistakes avoided before the first nail goes into the wall. One warning: don't overcrowd!

Use of Pictures Groupings of shelves interspaced with pictures and personal accessories often offer the most versatile answer for almost any type of room. In doing these wall arrangements, it is best to try laying them out first on paper in sketch form. It's done much the same as a floor plan with graph paper measured out to represent the dimensions of the wall. Then

Winnebago Tests Show Top Tomatoes

BY V. W. PEROUTKY Winnebago Agricultural Agent

OSHKOSH — This is the time of year to make decisions on vegetable varieties for this spring. Tomatoes are the most popular vegetables raised in gardens here and tests conducted last year by myself and Prof. O. B. Combs, University of Wisconsin horticulturist, may shed some light on which are best for Winnebago County.

Seed for ten varieties was provided by Combs. These were seeded in flats by Ira Carlson, gardener and grounds superintendent at Winnebago State Hospital. Seeding was done during the first week of April.

Trial plots of ten plants each were set out at Rasmussen's Apple Acres on the Omro Road west of Oshkosh. Combs and I evaluated the plots at intervals from the planting on June 1 until final harvests late in September.

Tomato Plots The university's official vegetable plots are at the Hancock Research Station. Home gardeners as well as the commercial grower usually plant some early maturing plants and in the trial, the New Yorker was best. It is similar to Fireball but the fruit is larger, plants have better fruit coverage, and are resistant to wilt disease. The highest scoring, long yielding, mid-season variety was Jet Star, a hybrid. Plants are large, the fruit was free of cracks and a uniform red color. Staking would be advised for this variety in the home garden. Galaxy is another good variety, which matures a little later than New Yorker. Big Boy and Rutgers didn't show as well as Jet Star.

Still a different tomato variety, Glamour, proved best in fruit size for canning. Since they're smaller than Jet Star and Cardinal, they fit better in a fruit jar, either canned whole or halved. Where tomato juice is the canned product, however, fruit size isn't a great factor. A range in maturity adds interest and practicability in any garden. Early and mid-season tomatoes have been listed. Late varieties in the community aren't advised since the growing season is limited from Memorial Day until near Sept. 20, the average frost-free period. Gardeners will miss something, however, if they don't have a plant or two of Small Fry. The fruit is a dark red and oblong, the size of a pullet egg. This variety is on the food store market counter now, imported from greenhouse commercial plantings and sold in paper cartons. One fruit is a small mouthful, the juice doesn't squirt out and three or four before a meal will calm the appetite to cut down on calorie intake. They're tasty, fresh out of the refrigerator. All remaining varieties in the Apple Acres plot had faults, primarily because fruit cracked, or had yellow or green areas mixed with red. Among the list were Spring Giant, Springset, Cardinal, Supersonic, and John Baer - Bonny Best.

Another fine tomato for this area is Sunray. Its fruit is uniform in size, orange colored, firm, high in meat, low in acid. The color and texture adds life to a serving of tomato salad. Sliced Sunray doesn't wilt as fast as red varieties. A plate of sliced red tomatoes after excursions. One fruit is a small morsel compared to a like plate, color-dressed with slices of Sunray. A home garden.

NEW EUROPEAN REDUCING DISCOVERY SPREADS LIKE WILDFIRE OVER ENTIRE CONTINENT!
From England Comes News of the Greatest Breakthrough to End Overweight Forever!
YES NOW YOU CAN EAT ALL YOU WANT AND LOSE WEIGHT

'I lost 71 pounds of dangerous fat in only 60 days!'

My Story of How I Was Able to LOSE 71 Pounds in ONLY 2 SHORT MONTHS Even Amazes Me ...
DON'T COUNT CALORIES ... Eat 3 FULL MEALS A DAY ... NO LOW CALORIE DIETS ...
NEVER BE HUNGRY AGAIN ... COMPLETELY SAFE FOR ANY MAN OR WOMEN IN NORMAL HEALTH.

In September of 1970 I was fortunate enough to come across a two page article in one of the leading women's publications in the United States. This article told about a NEW, QUICK, SURE and SATISFYING METHOD that started in England and is presently sweeping through France, Holland and ALL OF EUROPE. People who were overweight, who have tried just about everything to LOSE POUNDS and INCHES and were always unsuccessful ... finally found the missing link as to why, no matter how or what they tried ... would not work to any degree. These fortunate people Stopped Starving Themselves, Stopped Counting Calories and STILL witnessed an unbelievable weight loss almost immediately. As I read more and more of this Startling Article, I realize the MANY MISTAKES I HAD MADE IN TRYING TO REDUCE MY WEIGHT and the more I read the MORE CONVINCED I WAS THAT I WAS GOING TO TRY THE PLAN THIS ARTICLE RECOMMENDED.

I began to follow this simple method and was startled to see the weight disappear before my very eyes. IN ONLY 1 WEEK 15 POUNDS MELTED AWAY. My clothing started to hang. I actually looked like I was wearing someone else's clothing. This didn't bother me at all, for this Easy, Quick and Safe Way to lose weight was what I had been looking for my entire adult life. And amazingly enough I wasn't hungry even once. As the weight seemingly dripped off I became more and more confident and as people praised my new appearance, I was even more thrilled and inspired to keep going. Finally after a short while I couldn't wear any of my clothes any longer ... but this certainly didn't bother me. I ATE and ATE as the FAT LITERALLY FELL OFF.

I then decided to give this amazing new concept to everyone willing to try something COMPLETELY NEW IN WEIGHT REDUCTION.

Weird New Sonic Lure Caught Fish Like Crazy!

New vibrating lure gives loud gurgling, splashing, bubbling sounds as you skitter it along the surface of the water! Sends out up to 200 vibrations every minute underneath that water! Looks completely unlike anything that a fresh water fish has seen before.

This weird sight and weird sound and weird sonic vibrations—in one of its very first Summer trials—lured fish into attacking so savagely that they actually knocked it out of the water Hauled in trout, bass, muskie, walleye, and pike, even when other lures had caught little or no fish right next to it! Here's why—

CAUGHT! 120 FISH IN ONE HOUR!

At Cattail Lake, Illinois. A hot summer day! A beautiful stream-fed pond—90 by 60 feet wide! Fishermen trying lures, flies, natural bait! But there is only an occasional strike. It looks like a wasted day!

Then, three die-hard friends try their luck with me! We cast from the edge of the water. At the end of our lines is an entirely different lure—a weird little metal monster that casts like a bullet and flutters back through the water like a drowning bat!

FISHERMEN SURPRISED

Almost at once that quiet water explodes into action! The first strike causes a shout of excitement! And then a second strike! A third, fourth, sixth, seventh, eighth! Beautiful rainbows and browns still shimmering from the water —being pulled in at the rate of more than one every minute!

Now the water almost explodes with fish striking! Sometimes four and five trout savagely attack one lure at the same time! Fifty—seventy—ninety fish are caught and released! People along the shore stop to watch!

In one short hour, we have caught and released 120 fish! Why did this bat-shaped lure catch fish by the stringer-full—even after ordinary lures, and natural bait have caught little or nothing?

Because this lure gives off unique gurgling, bubbling, splashing surface noises—plus up to 200 sonic vibrations every minute underneath that water—that fish find irresistible!

Navy Fish Biologist report about the sounds fish make between themselves in the water: Fish follow the propellers of a boat as though they were hypnotized by the sound.

Those gurgling, bubbling, splashing surface sounds and underneath vibrations—actually seem to call fish to them. Research showed me that lures, like fish, create Sonic Vibrations in the water by their movements! So I designed a lure that flutters through the water up to 200 times a minute! Wing-shaped—bat-like—jerking and fluttering madly through that water—sending out irresistible sonic waves—gurgling, splashing, bubbling surface sounds that travel through water in every direction at the rate of 4,760 feet every second, the actual speed of sound under water!

FANTASTIC CATCHES

"VIBRA-BAT" lure caught a 10 pound 7½ ounce Northern on one of its first tests—only moments after it hit the water—hauled in six bass in sixty minutes in another test, all 2½ pounds or larger—pulled in perch by the dozens in a third test at Belmont Harbor, Illinois, even after live bait and lures had scarcely a strike, and continued to land so many fish, so quickly, that fishermen watched in amazement!

ARTIST'S CONCEPTION OF THE VIBRA-BAT LURE AND ITS SONIC EFFECT UNDER WATER! Try it at our risk!

Tests show this revolutionary new lure hauls in trout, bass, muskie, walleye, pike, salmon and other fresh water fish even in hard fished waters—produces strikes even when other fishermen alongside it are going almost unrewarded!

AMAZING 6-MONTHS TRIAL OFFER

You simply cannot believe the fish-catching power of this amazing lure until you try it yourself. For 6 full months entirely at our risk! We guarantee that VIBRA-BAT LURES will catch more fish for you ... or simply return them anytime within six full months for every cent of your purchase price back! You have nothing to lose! LURE GLOW works on any lure or live bait, on virtually any fresh or salt water sight feeding fish, perch, musky, pike, redbass, bass, grouper, trout, lady fish, walleye, bream, crappie, many others.

Light attracts fish so effectively that some states even outlaw use of any kind of light.

See how LURE GLOW can help you make record catches. A single container can treat lures or baits up to 300 or 400 times. No cost unless your baits and lures catch more fish.

WORKS ON ANY LURE OR LIVE BAIT

These photos show two identical worms — and two identical lures — but in each case, those treated with Lure Glow glow brightly in dark water! This fantastic scientific discovery now makes any lure, plug, spinner or live bait many times more effective when you use LURE GLOW

Research Center Quiz Reveals 'Fruit Tree I.Q.'

With increasing interest in ecology and the economy home gardeners have discussed the planting of fruit trees in gardens.

Many, however, are unsure about starting a home garden or planting a tree. The Stark-Burbank Research Center in Louisiana, Mo., has compiled a list of questions frequently asked by home gardeners.

The test will reveal your "Fruit Tree I.Q."

1. To produce fruit, all fruit trees require pollination, the transfer of pollen from one blossom to another. The most effective pollinator is:

- () a. The wind
- () b. Bees
- () c. Birds

2. Some fruit trees are "self-pollinating," this means that the tree does not need the help of birds, bees or breezes.

- () True
- () False

3. In comparison with fruit from standard size trees, that from dwarf-type trees is:

- () a. Slightly smaller
- () b. Slightly larger
- () c. About the same size

4. Prunes and plums are different species of fruit.

- () True
- () False

5. Dwarf-type fruit trees were "discovered" —

- () a. In the 1930's
- () b. In the 1600's
- () c. In the late 1800's

6. You have a fruit tree that you like very much and want another that will produce fruit exactly like it. The only way to grow such a tree is:

- () a. By starting and transplanting a seedling grown directly from a seed of the parent tree's fruit.
- () b. By grafting a small limb or bud from the parent tree to the root system of some other kind of tree.

7. The first plant patent ever granted to a fruit was:

- () a. In 1740
- () b. In 1868
- () c. In 1932

8. The only benefits we get from fruit trees are beautification, fruit crops, increased property value, and an underground network of roots that prevents erosion.

- () True
- () False

9. In comparison with standard-size trees, dwarf-type trees —

- () a. Bear about the same time
- () b. Bear a year or two later
- () c. Bear a year or two sooner

10. When full-grown, a standard-size apple tree needs a ground area approximately 40 feet square. In this same 40-by-40-foot space you can plant:

- () a. Four dwarf-type trees
- () b. Eight dwarf-type trees
- () c. Sixteen dwarf-type trees

11. All newly-planted fruit trees should be pruned.

- () a. Immediately after planting
- () b. No sooner than the first year after planting
- () c. No sooner than the second year after planting

- () a. The soil
- () b. The air

13. Apple trees bear fruit for a period of 30 to 40 years and usually the average tree pays for itself.

- () a. With its first crop
- () b. With its second crop
- () c. With its third crop

14. The first Arbor Day was proposed and celebrated in what state?

- () a. Illinois
- () b. Nebraska
- () c. Kentucky

ANSWERS

Answers to the questions have been supplied by Stark Brothers Nurseries, located in Louisiana, Mo., America's oldest and the world's largest nurseries.

1. Bees are by far the most effective of all fruit tree pollinators. They are so essential, in fact, that orchardists frequently rent entire hives of bees during the blossoming season.

2. False. All fruit trees need the pollination service of bees. Some trees need the pollen from another tree; those known as "self-pollinators," are trees whose blossoms can be fertilized by pollen from other blossoms on the same tree.

3. Dwarf-type trees (dwarf, double-dwarf, and semi-dwarf) bear fruit that is usually about the same size as fruit from standard trees.

4. False. Prunes and plums are merely different varieties of the same species. "All Prunes are Plums," said Luther Burbank. A prune is any plum that has enough sugar to dry without souring.

5. Dwarf-type trees are known to be at least 300 years old.

6. Grafting is the only way to produce a tree that is like its parent tree. If you planted all the seeds from an apple, for instance, the trees into which they grew would all be different from each other, and none would be like its parent tree.

7. The first plant patent ever granted to a fruit was for the Stark-Hal-Berta Giant Peach in 1932. Acclaimed the largest peach in the world, and that patent went to the Stark Brothers Nurseries. In 1930 the basic patent law was amended to include plant patents.

8. False. One of the greatest contributions of fruit trees, especially during today's need to restore the human environment, is the "filtering" of the air we breathe. Trees absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and convert it to oxygen.

9. Planted under the same conditions, dwarf trees usually will begin bearing fruit a year or two sooner than standard trees.

10. Sixteen dwarf-type trees can be planted in a 40-by-40-foot area. Six can be planted in a 10-by-20-foot area. Must they be the same kind of trees? Not at all. In that 10-by-20-foot area, you can grow a minimum of three different fruits, depending on need for pollinator-types.

11. All newly-planted trees should be pruned immediately after planting. The objective at this time is the development of a strong root system and the growth of a leader and two or three main branches. Pruning is what conserves growth energy for these areas.

12. It is estimated that plants get 90 per cent of their nutrition from the atmosphere and only 10 per cent from the soil. Plant fiber and tissue come from chlorophyll, which uses sunlight to create starch, sugar, and other important substances by combining carbon from the air with water and other nutrients from the soil.

13. Under ideal conditions, the first good crop of the average apple tree will pay for the initial cost of the tree. All other harvests are virtually clear profit.

14. Arbor Day was first proposed by J. Sterling Morton of Nebraska in the year 1872.

Melting Reveals Rodent Damage

MADISON — As snow cover disappears the winter diggings of small animals in lawns and gardens are exposed and winter gnawings on shrubs and small trees become visible.

A large share of the damage is from mice and rabbits, but there may be 10 or 15 kinds of small rodent-like animals in yards, according to Robert Ruff, University of Wisconsin extension wildlife ecologist. Some people in southern Wisconsin are concerned that they've been over-run by "gophers," Ruff said that true gophers have never been found south of the Wisconsin River.

Further south, the gophers prefer dense grassy areas which are relatively undisturbed, so it's very doubtful city dwellers ever will have significant problems with pocket gophers.

Rodents Love Yards

Actually there are several kinds of rodent-like animals in yards, according to Ruff. The insect-eating group consists of shrews, which frequently are confused with mice, moles, and even gophers. Wisconsin has six species of shrews, two of which are very rare.

Only two would probably be found in yards — a long-tailed shrew which is smaller than the house mouse and a larger, short-tailed shrew. Both feed extensively on insects and so are probably quite beneficial. They have very small eyes, are quite secretive and seldom are seen. The bite of the short-tailed or larger shrew is very painful and one up with a bare hand.

Three groups of rodents, the moles, ground squirrels, and mice, are probably the most numerous animals in yards and cause the greatest amount of damage.

Ground squirrels hibernate in winter, and probably won't appear above ground for another month. But moles and mice are active all winter.

Burrows Crease Lawns

Many plowed dirt burrows appearing as snow melts have been made by moles. Some of the lumpy burrows in lawns during summer also are produced by moles. We have two mole species in Wisconsin, the star-nosed mole found in the northern half of the state close to water, and the prairie mole in south-central and western Wisconsin.

The prairie mole prefers loose sandy soil and lawns, but really doesn't feed much on plant material. An estimated 80 per cent of its diet is animal matter such as earthworms, beetles, insects and spiders. Usually it takes a special type of trap to catch moles so they really can be a nuisance when abundant.

Damage by Mice

There may be more than 10 kinds of mice in yards. Perhaps the most abundant and harmful of these are the meadow vole. This is a short-tailed mouse which builds runways through the grass which may give lawns a lumpy appearance. Voles are active at all seasons, during both day and night, and consume huge quantities of vegetable matter. They probably are the most abundant animal in the state, next to the short-tailed shrew, and the majority of shrub and tree damage undoubtedly is caused by this mouse, noted Ruff. It's been estimated, he said, that 10 mice per acre in a 100-acre field could consume 11 tons of grass or 5.5 tons of hay each year. They have tremendous appetites and because of their abundance can cause real problems in yards. Mice are easily trapped with ordinary mouse traps but new mice will move in nearly as rapidly as others are trapped so control is difficult.

Easily Built Shelves Offer Storage Area

Houses seldom are built with enough storage space to suit every house owner. Frequently one of the first chores of new occupants is the building of storage areas.

A bare partition in the living room often defeats the householder entering the field of interior decoration. Frequently the area is filled only by a chair, an end table, and pictures.

Actually, the area can be utilized as a valuable and attractive storage space.

A square-grooved softwood plywood siding can be adapted to support shelves and small storage units which slide into the grooves at whatever height is preferred.

Not only do the various levels create a contemporary visual pattern, but the spacing flexibility permits the householder to change the shelf height to suit special items with a minimum of effort.

A Storage Wall utilizes space which otherwise would be wasted. The wall, designed by the American Plywood Association, is formed of standard, grooved structural plywood panels.

4 Million Wheels And Not a Road

An estimated one-million four-wheel motor vehicles will be sold in the United States this year that may never see a highway.

These are the powered yard vehicles, riding mowers and lawn and garden tractors, which will be put to work grooming yards and gardens this coming growing season. The units are rapidly growing in popularity not only for their ease of operation but because they are versatile in doing other jobs around the modern day grounds. However, caution should be taken when using the machines. These vehicles should be given the same respect as the family auto, according to the Outdoor Power Equipment Institute. Don't allow children to operate the power equipment and keep keys out of the ignition when machines are not in use. Don't allow children or pets to be in the working area.

Safety Precautions
Other Institute safety suggestions advise operators to read the owner's manual and note all operating and safety instructions.

Disengage power to attachments before leaving the seat and give the mower blade ample time to stop before dismounting.

Operators should be especially cautious when backing. Make sure no children have come into the area.

Gene Boosts Sunflower Production

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department scientists have come up with a sexy sounding development that could launch the United States into sunflower oil competition with the Soviet Union.

The discovery of a "fertility restorer gene" could mean that commercial production of hybrid sunflowers is feasible, the department said. Until now one of the problems with U. S. hybrid sunflowers has been inconsistent yields and oil content resulting from plant breeding.

The "fertility restorer gene," according to officials, could eliminate the inconsistencies of hybrid sunflower production.

Sunflower oil ranks second to soybean oil in world production. The United States now produces less than one per cent of the world supply. The Soviet Union produces about 60 per cent.

Running Mowers Pose Danger to Children

When leaving your power mower — even for a moment — be sure to stop the engine. Small tots can be dangerously playful with a mower's running blade.

A Scientific Approach aids mowing. Unnecessary backing and turning can be eliminated by planning a continuous mowing pattern for riding mowers and lawn and garden tractors. Alternating mowing patterns will promote development of a smoother-looking lawn and eliminate wheel marks. The diagonal pattern at left progresses across the yard in a triangular design while the "land" pattern at right moves across in a rectangular or square design depending on the shape of the yard.

Construction Costs Cause Spurt in Home Remodeling

BY EDGAR V. HALL
Executive Director, National Home Improvement Council Inc.

This year, at a time when rising construction costs and interest rates prevent many families from owning new homes, more Americans than ever before are considering remodeling their present homes. As a matter of fact, spending for fixing up the home is the first preference for American families these days.

But at the same time, too many homeowners still hesitate to improve their houses. They have heard that prices for fixing up are high.

Well, of course, it's wise to be prudent when spending for home improvement just as it would be in making any other major purchase.

Exercise ordinary caution and care when remodeling and you should be pleased with the results.

Recommendation Vital
When selecting a contractor, it's good idea to get the recommendation of friends who have had similar work done.

Other sources of reliable remodelers are the recommendations of the home improvement loan officer at your local lending institution, a local building materials dealer or a local chapter of the National Home Improvement Council, National Association of Home Builders or National Remodelers Association.

Most cities have one or another of these. Be sure to get at least two bids — three are even better — from local contractors.

Virus Control Kills Worms On Cabbage

Cabbage loopers — among the most difficult vegetable pests to control with conventional measures — can be killed when treated with virus formulations.

A trio of scientist working with the Agricultural Research Service of the United States Department of Agriculture discovered ways to control the cabbage loopers.

The insects died when sprayed or dusted with virus formulations alone or when combined with insecticides or bacterial formulations.

Imported cabbageworms, diamondback moth larvae and fall armyworms also were killed by the nuclear polyhedrosis virus and preparations of Bacillus thuringiensis.

Virus bacteria combination provided better control of armyworm than bacteria used alone.

When the virus was combined with insecticides it was more effective than when cabbage looper was treated only with insecticides.

The tests were conducted for five years at Charleston S.C., by entomologist Charlie S. Creighton, assistant Thomas L. McFadden and mycologist James V. Bell. The South Carolina Agricultural Experiment Station, Charleston, cooperated in the tests.

Loose-Fitting Clothes can spell trouble for homeowners working with power equipment. As the girl bends over her power mower her loose clothes can catch in the equipment. Whether planning on lawn or garden work homeowners should wear functional garments. Frills can be dangerous. Garden and yard work should not be done in bare feet. Shorts also pose dangers.

Pool Sales Show Slump During 1970

The nation's swimming pool industry — estimated at $1.5 billion in sales annually — splashed through 1970, a year of difficult economic and labor conditions — to record gains only slightly above the previous year, according to surveys released by the National Swimming Pool Institute.

Sales predictions for 1971 are mixed.

"If the economy turns up early this year," says Brack Whitaker, president of NSPI. "Then we should have a really good year because of the pent-up demand."

Leonard Berens, president of KDI-Paragon in Pleasantville, New York, thinks the stock market will have a lot to do with it.

Stocks Vital
"We know some people who would have sold some stocks last year in order to buy pools," he notes, "but with their stocks down they couldn't afford to take the loss."

If the market goes up — and holds — it may be a good omen for the industry.

Unemployment remains a major unknown factor, however. Said one pool man: "There's a 6.6 per cent unemployment in this area of which 90 per cent are engineers and 80 per cent are our customers."

Construction Costs Cause Spurt in Home Remodeling

BY EDGAR V. HALL
Executive Director, National Home Improvement Council Inc.

This year, at a time when rising construction costs and interest rates prevent many families from owning new homes, more Americans than ever before are considering remodeling their present homes. As a matter of fact, spending for fixing up the home is the first preference for American families these days.

But at the same time, too many homeowners still hesitate to improve their houses. They have heard that prices for fixing up are high.

Well, of course, it's wise to be prudent when spending for home improvement just as it would be in making any other major purchase.

Exercise ordinary caution and care when remodeling and you should be pleased with the results.

Recommendation Vital
When selecting a contractor, it's good idea to get the recommendation of friends who have had similar work done.

Other sources of reliable remodelers are the recommendations of the home improvement loan officer at your local lending institution, a local building materials dealer or a local chapter of the National Home Improvement Council, National Association of Home Builders or National Remodelers Association.

Most cities have one or another of these. Be sure to get at least two bids — three are even better — from local contractors.

Pool Sales Show Slump During 1970

The nation's swimming pool industry — estimated at $1.5 billion in sales annually — splashed through 1970, a year of difficult economic and labor conditions — to record gains only slightly above the previous year, according to surveys released by the National Swimming Pool Institute.

Sales predictions for 1971 are mixed.

"If the economy turns up early this year," says Brack Whitaker, president of NSPI. "Then we should have a really good year because of the pent-up demand."

Leonard Berens, president of KDI-Paragon in Pleasantville, New York, thinks the stock market will have a lot to do with it.

Stocks Vital
"We know some people who would have sold some stocks last year in order to buy pools," he notes, "but with their stocks down they couldn't afford to take the loss."

If the market goes up — and holds — it may be a good omen for the industry.

Unemployment remains a major unknown factor, however. Said one pool man: "There's a 6.6 per cent unemployment in this area of which 90 per cent are engineers and 80 per cent are our customers."

Alaska's Gardens Produce Giant Yields

BY ORRIN MEYER
Calumet County Agricultural Agent

CHILTON — It's true, cabbages grow to 60 pounds and turnips over 30 pounds in Alaska. The same holds true for a lot of other vegetables. But then what should one expect? Alaska derives its name from the native "al-ay-ek-sa," meaning the big land. It is one-fifth the size of continental United States, contains 586,400 square miles and is as large as Texas, California, and Montana combined.

Vegetables in Alaska are king-sized. Calumet County Agricultural Agent Orrin Meyer examines a 20 pound turnip and half-pound radish during the Alaska State Fair. (Meyer Photo)

Popularity of Plums Dips in Wisconsin

MADISON — Improved transportation of fresh fruit from western states is probably responsible for a decline in popularity of plums among Wisconsin orchardists and home gardeners.

However, plums are recommended by the UW department of horticulture for home and small commercial plantings.

The most reliable blue variety is Mount Royal, according to George Klingbeil, university extension horticulturist. Mount Royal is good for fresh eating, the canning, and freezing. It is self-fertile, so pollination by another variety is not necessary. It can be grown throughout the state.

Blue Plums

Italian and Stanley are blue plum varieties recommended by the UW but should only be grown in the southern part of the state.

There are many varieties of red plums which will grow and produce in Wisconsin. Klingbeil said all need cross pollination.

by another red variety. Old standard varieties such as Pipe-stone, Superior, Monitor and Underwood, are suited for Wisconsin.

Danson, a small blue plum, is excellent canned and makes a high quality preserve. Trees of this variety may be difficult to obtain, he said.

Brush Fruit

A highly productive brush type fruit is the cherry-plum hybrid. Klingbeil lists the most common as Sapa, Sapalta and Opata with Compass as the required pollinator. They are best for canning and make excellent jam.

Plums do not keep long after reaching maturity. Refrigerated storage will preserve them for about a week.

Plums have several troublesome insect pests, including plum curculio, aphids, and lesser peach tree borer. The most serious disease is brown rot which frequently affects ripening fruit. Brown rot also attacks the cherry-plum hybrids.

Seriously, the cold moist weather and long daylight hours during the growing season, accompanied by adequate care and fertilization produce giant growths.

Skunk Cabbage

Skunk cabbage, an early harbinger of spring in Calumet County, grows also to enormous proportions in Alaska.

Acres of more moderately sized, high quality vegetables are grown commercially, and home gardens flourish even above the Arctic Circle. On a recent visit to the remote Eskimo village, Kotzebue beyond the Arctic Circle, we photographed a fine vegetable garden. It was fenced to keep out roving caribou. Dogs were no problem. They all were chained.

Approved varieties suitable for Alaska's climate include potatoes, cabbage, carrots, beets, celery, lettuce, broccoli, brussel sprouts, peas, cauliflower, rhubarb, turnips, radishes, strawberries, and raspberries. Tomatoes and cucumbers grow well in greenhouses. Potatoes are the second major source of farm income in Alaska.

'Warm' Climate

Parts of Alaska are less cold than some may believe. Weather may be even more agreeable than in Calumet County. In the state capitol, Juneau, the extreme high is 87 and the extreme low minus 10. Kodiak is even better, ranging from 81 to minus 5 degrees. Anchorage, which contains half of the population, has an extreme high of 87 and an extreme low of minus 38. During 29 years in Calumet County we've experienced a low of minus 33. Juneau, Kodiak, and Anchorage are in southern Alaska and are warmed by the Japanese current. Beyond the Alaska Mountain Range which surrounds Anchorage and into the Matanuska Valley and temperatures start dropping pretty fast. At the University of Alaska in Fairbanks the extremes are 93 to minus 66.

Long Days

In summer Anchorage has up to 17 hours of sunshine daily, and Fairbanks in central Alaska has 21 hours. That's just about continuous light.

Length of the growing season also is a surprise. In the Matanuska Valley, the growing season is 170 days long.

Use Safety Measures In Fueling Mowers

Power mowers have the power to be dangerous if not used with care and good sense. Here are some safety suggestions from the National Fire Protection Association:

Refuel outdoors to avoid accumulation of vapors which could cause an explosion. When refueling, observe the "No Smoking!" rule without exception.

Wipe up any spilled gasoline before starting the motor, and store fuel in a sturdy metal container with a tight-fitting lid — never in a glass jar or jug.

Vegetable Yields

Then, providing all factors are favorable, one must consider the fertility of the Alaska's soils, like most soils, need fertilizers for good yields. Most home gardeners apply three pounds of commercial fertilizer on every 100 square feet of garden area worked into the top two inches. A common one is 8-36-16. An added cup of ammonium nitrate for each 100 feet of row is placed along the side in July.

As we visited State Fair at Fairbanks, women of the University of Alaska were serving moose, caribou, and reindeer in their quonset dining hall. We of course tried them.

nuska Valley beyond Anchorage, the growing season is 105 days. That's nearly the same as in Calumet County. In Calumet County we recommend a 95 day corn.

There is the problem of elevation in Alaska, however. Land more than 2,000 feet above sea level is not recommended for cropping. Here frost can occur any month of the year. Narrow valleys and low hollows often have inadequate air drainage increasing risk of frosts. On northern slopes snow melts slower and soils warm up later. A high ridge or mountain to the east will block morning sun and shorten hours of sunshine. The best locations, of course, are a gentle southern slope and wide valley floors having adequate air drainage.

Vacuum Cleaner New Collector of Seeds

Vacuum cleaners used by the United States Department of Agriculture for collecting insects now are being refined for use on harvests of seeds.

A Washington State University horticulturist, Lee W. Hudson, and Albert M. Davis, an agronomist with the department's Agricultural Research Service, discovered a new way of using the vacuum to collect seeds while working at Pullman, Wash.

They claim the new method is more efficient than older harvesting methods and causes less injury to plants.

Efficient Method

Formerly, seed for their studies was harvested by slipping a cloth bag over seed heads, which were vigorously scrubbed together to dislodge the seeds. Immature seeds as well as fully ripened ones often came off the plants, seeds fell from the bag and were lost, and the scrubbing frequently damaged heads so that a subsequent harvest of the later-maturing seeds was impractical.

All the problems were avoided with the new collector, according to the study.

The machine, a sort of over-size vacuum cleaner, is carried papoose like on the back of the operator.

The device weighs an estimated 40 pounds and is powered by a gasoline engine. The end of the vacuum hose, fitted with a cloth receiver bag at the suction end, is placed over the entire seed head, which is gently scrubbed by a helper.

As each collection bag is filled it is replaced with a fresh one. The vacuum suction prevents seed from falling to the ground, and the gentle scrubbing doesn't harm the head. Only mature seeds are collected and the immature seeds may later be collected.

The technique also is speedy. Researchers say the method is about twice as fast as previous means. They are considering some changes, however, such as eliminating the bag changing and developing a better carrier for the rig — perhaps by mounting it on a garden tractor.

Perennial Vegetables Bonus In Well Organized Garden

Many of Wisconsin's home vegetable growers are studying garden supply catalogs and planning spring vegetable planting.

Discussing vegetable varieties suitable for Wisconsin, O. B. Combs, University of Wisconsin extension horticulturist, said home gardeners who don't already have perennial vegetables should consider planting some.

Perennials, of course, are those plants which continue to live from year to year. They include asparagus, rhubarb, chives, and certain onions.

Perennial Plants

Combs said the rust-resistant Martha Washington asparagus is an excellent choice. He recommended Canada Red and McDonald, two excellent new rhubarb varieties. The home garden will need only a clump or two of chives to supply a sufficient crop. He said the perennial onion is not commonly seen. These are top multipliers, or Egyptian onions, which provide green onions early in the spring.

Leavy green vegetables are important nutritionally, and Combs indicated practically every garden should include Brussels, sprouts, broccoli, celery, cabbage, chard, lettuce, parsley and spinach.

Combs suggested the planting of Jade Cross Brussels sprouts. It grows well in Wisconsin and produces an excellent crop.

Several varieties of broccoli are available. Combs said Spartan early is a good one. There is a new hybrid green sprouting broccoli called Green Comet. There also is a purple variety, Royal Purple.

The important thing to remember about cabbage varieties selected for growth in Wisconsin is their resistance to the disease known as "yellows." Some of the important resistant varieties Combs mentions are Badger Market, Market Prize and Sanabell. Sanabell is a new variety recently released by the University of Wisconsin department of plant pathology.

Varieties of Celery

There also are several choices of celery. Combs recommended the Golden type as very good if a self-blanching variety is desired. Summer Pascal is an in-between variety; quite green, but high in quality. Utah 5270 is one of the better varieties of the late maturing, large green type. Combs said red chard is as good as green, and much more attractive. Chard actually is a leafy beet. The red varieties are Ruby, or Rhubarb.

Many lettuce varieties are available. Among the leaf kinds, Combs suggested Oak Leaf. Salad Bowl is another good variety and somewhat resembles old-fashioned Black Seeded Simpson.

Spring Cleaning Combats Fires

Homeowners can combat fire by keeping kitchen equipment clean. A clean kitchen range and heating system seldom cause serious fires in homes, according to the National Fire Protection Association.

An estimated 85,000 building fires occur each year in the nation because of dirty, defective heating and cooking equipment according to association studies.

Now, during spring clean-up, is a good time to have heating systems cleaned and repaired. Chimneys should also be checked for tightness and dirt.

Greasy deposits can build on exhaust fans and ducts from kitchen ranges posing hidden fire dangers.

Lettuce Choices

Some butterhead types will stand longer without going to seed, including Butter Crunch, Summer Bib and Butter King. Combs noted that Wisconsin growers may have little success with crisp head lettuce, the type found in stores, because of its susceptibility to yellows. He suggested Great Lakes 659 or Fulton for gardeners who want to try the crisp head lettuce.

Parsley varieties are listed in several forms. Combs said the curly ones, such as Moss Curled, Double Moss Curled, or Perfection, are very good and excellent in food value.

Of the many varieties of spinach, Combs advised planting the long-standing Bloomsdale. King of Denmark is a good late season variety.

Southern Plants Ideal

Residents of southern states are quite familiar with kale, mustard and collards. Combs noted that many Wisconsin gardeners don't know these leafy vegetables can be grown in their gardens. An excellent variety of kale is Curly Scotch. Southern Curled mustard is a fine variety. For collards, he suggested the Georgia or Vates varieties.

Combs recommended planting Nantee carrots. An excellent new variety is called Spartan Sweet. Marketmore cucumbers were his choice for slicing.

For bush green beans, Top Crop or Tender Green are good varieties. For pole beans, he backed Kentucky Wonder or Blue Lake.

As for the most important vegetable in Wisconsin gardens, the tomato, Combs said the Spring Set Hybrid is an excellent very early small plant type. Jet Star Hybrid is outstanding and good for staking. If yellow tomatoes are desired, Sun Ray or Jubilee may be tried. For those who want a small fruited tomato, much like the small red ones now available in small boxes at produce counters, Small Fry is perhaps the best variety.

The department of horticulture's new revised list of suggested vegetable varieties for Wisconsin gardens is available soon at county extension offices.

...And the Ecstasy—Pages 8-11

In Our VIEW

The annual Madison Madness struck Wisconsin high school basketball fans on schedule in mid-March.

It is, of course, the WIAA State Basketball Tournament, which each spring brings the top high school cage teams, plus busloads of emotionally-committed fans, to the state capital for a week-end of fast-paced excitement.

This year, the Fox Cities were well represented, with two teams—the Appleton West Terrors and Neenah Shattuck Rockets—in championship competition. The Post-Crescent, as usual, sent down a team of writers and photographers, and they tell the story of the "agony and the ecstasy" of the tournament on pages 8 through 11.

A somewhat lower-keyed story of youth is offered by Bill Knutson, of The Post-Crescent staff, as he chronicles the successful growth of the Peeters Group Home, near Shiocton. Mr. and Mrs. Peeters have, with the help of the state and of some local benefactors, turned their hilltop farm house into a haven for seven troubled boys.

Other articles of more than routine interest include Lillian Mackesy's Historically Speaking column about the great New London flood; Chuck Dilday's column, which this week is devoted to a description of the Passover, and a fine interview with the Nobel Prize-winning scientist whose "Green Revolution" is improving nutrition for deprived peoples around the globe.

An End to Running

Peeters Group Home Opens Doors to Troubled Boys

A boy often needs someone to talk to. Sometimes it might be about a problem in school. Sometimes he just needs some assurance that the world isn't as big and complex as it seems. The boys, who probably had no one to talk to at home, find an attentive listener in Donald Peeters.

Written for VIEW
By Bill Knutson

SHIOCTON—Seven boys are living with Mr. and Mrs. Donald Peeters in a big house on a hill 10 miles northwest of here.

If they weren't here, most of the seven boys would be in a state or private institution, a state hospital or jail.

Most of the seven boys who are in the Peeters Group Home now, and most of the other 16 who have been there over the past four years, have had brushes — or, in some cases, head-on collisions — with the law.

Sometimes it meant just continually running away from a home that offered little reason to stay. Sometimes it meant burglaries and car thefts and vandalism and truancy. In one instance, drugs were partly to blame.

But a few of the boys who have lived with the Peeters simply had no place to go. Home meant continued beatings, neglect, lack of interest, drunkenness, fights and a maze of other factors that complicate and sometimes ruin young lives. Sometimes home meant one parent or no parent. A few of the boys came from "good homes" where things just didn't work out.

In state institutions like Kettle Moraine and Wales and Lincoln, there are psychologists, psychiatrists, psychoanalysts and counsellors who try to untangle the web in which the delinquent or troubled boy flounders. Many times their efforts are successful. But all too often, in the past, the boy has come out of the overcrowded institution another step closer to a life of crime. That, juvenile authorities are hoping, will change with the recent opening of the new Lincoln School for Boys at Merrill.

Regardless, most responsible social service agencies will institutionalize a youngster only as a last resort.

There are no licensed psychiatrists, psychologists or counsellors at the Peeters Group Home. Born on a nearby farm, Peeters has spent most of his young life farming. He and his wife have high school educations. They would have trouble talking in terms of social roles or deviant behavior patterns or assimilation.

But the results they have obtained with the boys who have been placed in their home by the court have been "very satisfactory" according to LaVern Leach, group home coordinator for the Outagamie County Department of Social Services, which supervises operations at the state-licensed home.

When it opened in 1967, the Peeters facility was the first in Wisconsin specifically designed and constructed for group home use. The Peeterses, who have three children of their own, had kept foster children for several years in a small house on their 160-acre farm.

Peeters financed construction of the group home and is paid a monthly, per-boy allowance from the county. The home can accommodate up to eight boys, although average occupancy is six. The boys, who must be between 13 and 18 years of age and must live in Outagamie County, usually are placed in the home through the juvenile court.

Under the interpretation of the law, most of them are delinquents. But Peeters sees that as little more than an impersonal label. "I don't think of them as delinquents," he explained. "Sure, some of these kids have problems, but their parents are to blame for a lot of it. Some of these kids just never had a chance."

A social worker characterized one of the recent

The boys at Peeters Group Home are permitted to apply their own decorative touches to their rooms. The home has eight bedroom-studies like the one above. Attention and Understanding occupants as "the most rejected kid I've ever seen — totally deprived."

The Peeters are not "parents" to the boys. They don't try to be. The last thing some of the boys need is more parents to complicate their lives further. The first thing they need is attention and understanding. The Peeters and the social service agency share a goal: Return the boys to their own homes as soon as — and if — conditions permit.

The "senior" group home resident has been there two years. One boy was there nearly that long when his mother, who he didn't know was alive, showed up out of nowhere and claimed him. The average stay at the home is just under a year.

Parents can visit at the home. Some do, many do not. The boys are permitted to return to their homes one weekend a month, during the school holidays and for a few weeks during summer vacation.

They attend junior and senior high schools in Clintonville. Leach had praised the "understanding and interest" shown in the boys by Clintonville school officials, who often make adjustments to accommodate the students. Some of the boys have serious learning problems that often are linked to their other problems. One boy has worked up to nearly an A average.

Most of the boys' out-of-school time is spent at the group home. Each lad has a small room on the lower level of the 20-room house. Each room contains a bed, a desk and such personal belongings as pictures of singers, race cars, Cassius Clay, girls and other items of interest to teen-agers. In one room empty beer cans are stacked neatly against the wall. On the door of another is a sign, "Cell No. 744." The boys can do (within reason) what they want with their living quarters.

There is a small television set in the first level day room, and in the recently completed recreation room the boys have a pool table, phonograph and weight-lifting equipment. Appleton Jaycettes and the Social Action Group from Combined Locks donated materials and some of the furnishings for the recreation room. Peeters, the boys and a couple of social workers provided the labor.

Although the Peeters reside apart from the boys, on the second floor of the group home, all of the occupants sit together at one long table during meals.

Mealtime means six quarts of milk, three bowls of potatoes, four chickens or eight cookie sheets of pizza or "a mountain" of grilled cheese sandwiches. About 12 dozen eggs are consumed each week.

The boys must keep their own living quarters in order and are required to do other household chores like setting the table, washing dishes and cleaning the garage. They get an allowance of $3 a week. Two boys do light farm chores and get $4.50 a week. Peeters, who once had a large farming operation, now maintains a number of pigs, a goat and a horse, and raises some feed crops. In the past the boys earned a few dollars by raising and selling pickles and cabbage.

Discipline has been no big problem, Peeters said. Bound by what might be viewed as a common cause, the boys "stick together" and help each other out.

There are no bars on the windows, nor are the doors locked. Sometimes morning comes and a boy or two is missing. But he seldom goes far — sometimes no farther than his social worker's house. About the most serious thing the group home runaways have done was to steal a car.

Tight controls are not kept on the boys. Quiet but firm, Peeters works to gain their respect. "Once you lose their respect, you can't help them anymore," he explained. And each boy has to be treated individually. Over the years, some have had too little supervision and some have been held in check by reins that were too tight. The boys know that if they misbehave they will lose privileges — one being telephone usage — or could be grounded for one or more Friday nights. Friday nights means a night out, usually in Clintonville.

The boys have a big voice in selecting their own clothes, purchased out of their $9 per month clothing allowance. Peeters insists they keep their hair "decent." He also insists the boys attend the church of their choice on Sunday.

Many recreational activities are family affairs. Sometimes everyone goes skiing behind the house, with the boys sharing two pairs of skis that Peeters had when he was their age. Peeters hunts with the boys and near the end of the school year, they make their first camping excursion into northern Wisconsin. When the Appleton Optimist Club bought three tents and other camping and outdoor equipment for the group home, Peeters and the

One of the boys who has since left the group home, uses the old gloves at left for practice on his route to Golden Gloves state competition. Some of the other boys still use them. boys made a trailer to haul it. Peeters installed more seats in his small van truck so he could transport his own family and the boys.

Sometimes fun consists of swimming in the Wolf River near Leeman or roller skating at Bear Lake. Sometimes it means just playing cards after supper or going out to eat with money saved from allowances or with profits from a cold drink machine in the day room. One of the boys took an interest in boxing and, with the help and encouragement of his social worker, went on to participate in state Golden Gloves competition.

Peeters and the boys tore the ceiling out of part of the old farmhouse behind the group home, panelled the walls, covered the windows and now have their own gymnasium. Appleton Jaycettes donated basketball equipment. Lighting in the little (28 by 15 feet) gym isn't the best. There is no heat, and the ball doesn't bounce well on the "dead" hardwood floor. But it's better than no basketball court at all.

When some of the boys indicated a desire to work on cars and do other mechanical work, Peeters recruited their help. Together, they added to the basement of the farmhouse, put in a new floor and found an air compressor and a welding unit. They now have the start of a shop although they need a lot more equipment.

The group home depends on clubs and private donors for much of the furnishings and recreational equipment. Peeters said he and the boys could use a number of things now. Things like a boat, an outboard motor, water skis, ski and icefishing gear, workshop furnishings and maybe even a snowmobile might not be considered necessities, but all would help in providing a more complete program at the home, Peeters said.

Among the more pressing everyday needs are things like dishes to replace the ones that are chipped, paint to cover scarred walls, furniture to replace that worn by four years of hard use, new carpeting and drapes and ceiling tile.

Operation of the group home is, in a sense, a business for Donald Peeters and his wife. They make a living helping boys who cannot help themselves.

There are times when he wishes he had a different job. Like when he remembers that he and his wife haven't had a vacation in four years because the county has been unable to find acceptable "relief" operators for the home. And when they see a boy who "couldn't make it" at the group home leave for Wales or St. Joseph Home in Green Bay. But there have been few "dropouts".

When Peeters sees the boys enter military service or go home to stay or, as in one instance, enter college, and when the boys who have lived with them return for a visit, he tells himself that running a group home beats working in a mill.

VIEW—Robert Baeten

Evening is approaching, which means it's time to get at the farm chores. Peeters raises pigs and has a few miscellaneous animals on his small farm. Peeters has spent most of his life on a farm.

No Vacation Time In Four Years . . .

In the Battle Against Hunger . . .

He's America's No. 1 Revolutionary

By Saul Pett
AP Special Correspondent

Iowa-born Dr. Norman Borlaug is more than just a scientist. The Nobel Peace Prize was awarded to "the man, Dr. Borlaug, of whom the scientist is just one well-integrated part."

And the strong back of a field hand, the contagious fire of a young teacher, the drive of a bulldozer, the patience of an always-pregnant mother, the intensity of a salesman, the zeal of a fund-raiser, the positiveness of a Norman Vincent Peale, the momentum of a head-knocked, a red-tape cutter, a Texas football coach tasting his first championship.

All this Borlaug has thrown into the "Green Revolution," which, according to at least one authority, is likely to affect more people in a short time than any other technological change in history. And, according to another, Borlaug has made a greater contribution toward the end of hunger in the world than any other living man.

His wheat and the new hybrid strains of high-yield rice subsequently developed by others have begun to transform large areas of the world. In some, hope has begun to replace despair and political chaos promises to yield to stability. While begetting new problems, the Green Revolution has bought man more time, experts agree, in the race between population explosion and man's ability to feed himself.

The results have been spectacular in the five short years since Borlaug's new wheat seeds began to go abroad from his experimental stations outside of Obregon and Mexico City. India has increased its yearly wheat production from 12 million tons to 21 million. West Pakistan has gone from importer to exporter of wheat and rice. The Philippines, which used to import one million tons of rice a year, is now self-sufficient and soon will be exporting.

In varying degrees, the Green Revolution also has been felt in Turkey, Malaysia, Burma, Indonesia, Afghanistan, Kenya, Tunisia, Morocco, Algeria, Libya, Brazil and Paraguay. The spread has been fast, nowhere near fast enough to suit Borlaug, but Asia, for example, in five years has gone from only 200 acres seeded in the new high-yield cereals to 40 million.

"It took getting a lot of things unstuck," says Norman Borlaug, a supreme unsticker.

In 1965, India and Pakistan ordered 600 tons of Borlaug's seeds. At the last moment, when the shipment was ready to go, a snag developed; somebody discovered two words misspelled in the $100,000 letter of credit from Pakistan. Bank officials in Mexico said to hold up the ship. This was on a Friday and Borlaug roared, "Ship the damned seed, anyway. We'll fix everything Monday."

On Monday, war broke out between India and Pakistan and it took three weeks to straighten out the letter of credit. "I caught hell from everybody," Borlaug says. "but if the seed hadn't gone then it would have delayed planting a whole year." The next year, both countries, with Borlaug insinuating to each that the other was moving ahead agriculturally, vastly increased their seed orders and the Green Revolution was on in Asia.

More often than not, Borlaug went with it, training, teaching, arguing, pounding desks, pleading, threatening, cajoling, and frequently stepping on toes that only his more tactful employers, the Rockefeller Foundation, could soothe. He talked with farmers large and small, local scientists, bureaucrats, Cabinet members, prime ministers. In Pakistan, he was blocked by a hesitant government scientist who was afraid the new seed might fail and take his job with it. Borlaug went topside, to President Ayub Khan, and the thing was unstuck.

To senior or government scientists, he said, "You can't waste time chasing academic butterflies or enjoy the luxury of pursuing abstract details that have little to do with the production of bread for people's bellies. You can't wait for the perfect plant while people go hungry. Progress is made by using the best that is available right away while trying to improve it."

To others, he said, "I wouldn't give a nickel for a scientist with no social motivation."

Borlaug has a strong, no-nonsense face, blue eyes, graying sandy hair, stubborn chin and a powerful wiry body kept trim by long hours in the wheat fields of Mexico, where during spring harvest the heat ranges from 105 to 118. In his favorite outfit of baseball cap, zippered jacket, chino slacks and boots, he looks more than anything else like a coach, which he is, on several levels.

He was a college wrestler at the University of Minnesota and after coming to Mexico in 1944 introduced Little League, Pony and Colt League baseball to the country to provide his son with a chance to learn to compete. Borlaug himself coached 12 teams and won 11 league championships.

These days he has no time for baseball, but he is still a coach. Every year he and his staff train young agricultural students from abroad in the use of the new seeds and the slow arduous research methods that produced them.

Russia recently expressed an interest in the program. "I told them okay," Borlaug says, "if they send us agricultural students, not politicians."

His classroom here in northern Mexico is quite a sight. To the east, the brown humps of the Sierra Madre mountains and the mesquite and cactus and sand of semi-desert. In the foreground, the rich, well-irrigated wheat fields and there, under the big sky, in his baseball cap, speaking Spanish and English with lingering traces of Norwegian, surrounded by young foreign students in jeans and straw hats, some from friendly countries, some not, all listening intently to a simple non-doctrinaire man from Iowa whose simple gospel is, "Food is the moral right of all who are born into this world."

Backs Will Ache

He tells them they will need to work hard in the mud and dust, the heat and the cold. He tells them their backs will ache as they learn to inoculate plants, one at a time, with disease to test their resistance, to observe closely the differing reactions to water, light, fertilizer and carbon dioxide. He tells them they must learn to live with the plants, "to learn to talk to them and they'll talk back to you if you're listening and not sitting in some damn office." He tells them the ever present purpose of all this is not to produce a scientific paper, but to increase the yield and feed more people, and food will raise the level of man everywhere. He tells them there will be difficulties when they return home, that they will have to man the line, that in this game, "the quarterback always has to scramble to throw the long bomb against hunger," and, if all that sounds corny, it has, nonetheless, proven good for wheat.

Borlaug lives simply—in Mexico City in a small apartment with his wife; in Obregon, where he spends several months a year, in a drab leaky motel, in a town where they named a street "Calle Dr. Norman Borlaug," where the farmers made rich by his wheat live in lavish, block-square houses.

He couldn't care less. He doesn't know his own salary and just "keeps writing checks until they bounce." Regarding money, about all he knows is that the entire wheat program has cost no more than one Phantom jet, that if he could get more for research he would intensify the development of treficalle, a wheat-rye cross that could give many hungry people abroad the protein they desperately need.

In Obregon, he has no office, secretary or phone of his own. At night he takes calls next to the cash register of the motel restaurant, calls from around the world, from governments, universities, scientists, and the United Nations. He loathes writing letters but when the Nobel new disease." His preoccupations, day and night, are food and the population explosion which, "if we don't get smart we'll be the monster that will destroy us all." He knows that his own work and the Green Revolution have added to the population boom but asks, simply, "Do you control population by letting people starve?"

Tournament Time: The Joy And Pain of It All...

MADISON — This city's annual version of "The Agony and the Ecstasy," otherwise known as the WIAA State Basketball Tournament, recently completed its 56th running at the University of Wisconsin Fieldhouse.

And the mid-March classic, which brings Wisconsin's eight best prep teams together for the final reckoning, again ranked popular fare with its emotion-charged fans. The 3-day meet drew $4,784 spectators to the old barn-like structure on Monroe St., or just 183 fewer than the 1970 record gate.

But the '71 tournament won't be remembered by basketball buffs for months or years to come because of the numbers it attracted. Big crowds are hardly rarities for this affair.

You can bet, however, that when memorable meets of the past come up for future discussion, this year's scramble for the state championship will mark it as among the most memorable in history.

Major Upset

First, a team which was given little chance to accomplish anything of significance in the tourney ended by winning the big prize. Janesville Parker had the worst record of any school coming to Madison, but that didn't stop the Vikings from reaching the finals and upsetting Milwaukee King, 79-68, for the state crown.

Naturally, most observers point to Parker's tremendous shooting as a major factor in Janesville's championship.

But the Viking fans may have showed the most unified school spirit in the tourney. In addition to a throng of about 20 female cheerleaders, approximately 40-50 boys, wearing identical levis and shirts with the words "West Side" painted on the back, bounded out of their seats to lead an enthusiastic hip-swinging cheer. It gave Janesville and the entire Fieldhouse crowd a big lift.

The title game was noteworthy, too, because the King band was not allowed to perform while the ball was in play. Some observers will always maintain that King won its first two games because the same band, strengthened by the beat of a bass guitar and amplifier, gave a mental boost to its own players while distracting or "psyching out" the opponents. This year's tourney will also be remembered prominently as the time of a crippling snowstorm that socked Madison with over 14 inches of snow opening day. Most fans made it to the Fieldhouse, but travel by late in the afternoon was near impossible.

Frustration for Terrors, Rockets

About 350 Appleton West students spent the night in the Madison West gym, and as might be expected, sleep was at a premium. Those who managed a few winks lay on wrestling mats, while others chose to dance and listen to records, play pool, poker or volleyball.

One chaperone, bleary-eyed the next morning, reported he got at least 20 minutes of shut-eye during the course of the evening.

Nine busloads of Neenah fans were also forced to abandon plans for a trip home, and they wound up in the LaFollette gym. More lighthearted than their West counterparts after an opening game victory, some Rocket rooters reportedly went skinny-dipping in the school pool as well as trying tamer sports as basketball and ping-pong.

Ole Jorgensen, former Neenah coach and athletic director now retired, started driving home and reached Sun Prairie before attempting to go any further. When he could find no room elsewhere, he spent the night in the county jail.

The Fox Cities area, of course, sent the same two teams — Appleton West and Neenah — into state tourney competition this year as it did last season. But while the two local quintets fought their way into the title game in 1970, a similar happy circumstance wasn't in the cards for 1971.

It was a frustrating experience for both the defending champion Terrors and for the Rockets, who had been denied state crowns two years in a row by a single point.

West rooters delighted as their favorites outplayed Milwaukee King, 62-52, through the first 3½ quarters in their opening game. But then the roof caved in as the Milwaukeeans tallied 17 points to Appleton's two down the stretch, and the smiles turned to frowns after a 69-64 loss.

Neenah passed its first test, beating Milwaukee Tech, 65-47, as backers of the No. 1-ranked Red Rockets dreamed of an undefeated season and the coveted state title that previously had proved so elusive to their school.

Rocket boosters cheered wildly, too, when Neenah forged a 16-point lead, 40-24, in its second game with Janesville Parker. They were confident that a berth in the finals was only a matter of course.

But like the Terror fans, Neenah supporters felt their hopes plummet in the time remaining. Hampered by fouls to key players, the Rockets lost their momentum, and the eventual champions came on to win, 54-52.

Neenah captured its last game over Wausau East in another thriller, 70-69, after again wasting a big lead to win third place honors. Coach Ron Eirson's gang thus ended their campaign with a 25-1 record, the best in Neenah's history.

And West came back to score two wins after its first defeat, beating Cumberland, 65-47, and Milwaukee Tech, 72-58, to cop consolation (fifth place) laurels. Dick Emanuel's cagers ended 21-5.

Both the Rocket and Terror backers could be proud of their team's efforts in the state tourney, but their feelings of "what might have been if..." will remain a long time.

The '71 tourney will probably be recalled often, too, for one last reason. It was the final meet in which small schools had a chance to reach Madison.

None of the small schools did this year, and perhaps the call for separate meets is justified. At any rate, next year small and large schools will conduct their own championships and the state will have two public high titlists.

Appleton West band equipment (opposite page) is stacked in a corner; and Terror rooters try to pass the time in Madison West High School while a 14-inch snowstorm raged outside the first night of the tournament. At the right, Neenah followers Polly Schultz (left) and Amy Kluck disagree on a referee's call.

QUOTE-ACROSTIC PUZZLE

HOW TO SOLVE THE QUOTE-ACROSTIC:
1. Define "Clues," writing definitions in "Words" column over numbered dashes.
2. Transfer letters to numbered squares in diagram; black spaces separate words.
3. When pattern is completed, quotation can be read left to right. The first letters of the filled-in "Words," reading down, form an acrostic yielding the speaker's name and the topic of the quotation.

(Answer on Page 14)

Historically Speaking By Lillian Mackesy

All the talk of possible floods this spring brings to mind the big one of 1922 in New London. Every man, woman and child of the area remembers that flood, either by hearsay or by having lived through it. That was the year the north side of the city was inundated and many families had to flee their homes as water lapped over window sills.

The Wolf River, which flows westward through New London, toward Northport, usually floods its lowlands in the spring, but it was especially high that year. Word came to the Post-Crescent on April 8, 1922, that the basements in most of the business places on Water Street adjacent to the Wolf River would be flooded if the rains kept up. Already the G. A. Vandree Department Store in the Gallea Building had installed stoves temporarily for heat as the basement furnace was endangered by rising water.

Havoc Began

Then the dam broke up at Pella on the Embarrass River that same day, and the havoc started. The Embarrass enters New London at approximately its northwest corner, takes an easterly course through the city's north side, makes a southerly turn and empties into the Wolf.

When the dam went out, a flood of water came into the city and the Embarrass River literally took a short cut across New London's Second and Fifth Wards to the already swollen Wolf. The newspaper reported these two wards "inundated, entirely under water, causing isolation of every building in that section of the city as well as flooding practically every house."

The only way householders could travel out of the area was by boat. But that was only the beginning. Crews tried to divert the water that kept coming. They stacked sand bags. There was fear the road to Northport would be washed out. Before long, water was running over the wall of the city power house and firemen began using pumps. By Monday, the only two businesses (with waterproof basements) that had furnaces still working were W. J. Sader's Jewelry Store and the Bank of New London.

This, too, was only the beginning. Before the week was out the Borden Condensed Milk Plant had turned its workers to building a coffer dam around the plant, which saved its operations just in time. The water had reached the fire grates in the boilers threatening a shut-down.

Bridge Under Water

The Hatton Lumber Mill closed down with lumber in its yards starting to float away. Crews of men turned their attention to rescuing logs and hauling them to safe and higher ground. Many escaped into the current of the river and floated away. At Shawano Street, only a few blocks from the Water Street business district, the curved stone bridge over the raging Embarrass was almost under water. Hundreds of acres of land along both the Wolf and Embarrass rivers were covered with water three and four feet deep.

At Shiocton, the water was the highest in its history and this village and its surrounding countryside looked like an immense lake. Even the village sidewalks were under water and residents had taken to boats.

The front page headline of the Post-Crescent for April 11, 1922, read in oversized banner: "Water Damage Runs in Millions." The next day's paper carried a colorful word picture of the flood. It was written by a reporter on the scene by the name of W. H. Penhallegon. He described Water Street, New London's main business street along the Wolf River, "a tumbling, swishing torrent" of water. The side streets leading into Water Street were "raging rivers," and the north side of town beyond the business district "a sea of muddy, murky water." The flood waters were still pouring into the city from the two rivers.

The section of the city on the south side of the Wolf River was high and dry and stayed that way. It was the north side that received the untold damage. This is how Penhallegon saw it:

"Early Monday morning, water sweeping down the Embarrass River, flooded cellars and homes on the north side and by afternoon a large part of the Second and Fifth Wards was inundated. By Monday night the water was flowing through the doors and covering the floors of the houses.

Forced to Flee

"People living in one-story houses were forced to flee with what belongings they could carry away as hour by hour the water became deeper and deeper. People in two-story houses moved what household goods they could to the second floor. Men in hip boots waded through mud and water to aid in carrying women and children out of the flooded area, but some refused to leave their homes, choosing to remain as long as the flood does not endanger their lives."

As the water deepened in the north side residential area, the floodwaters from the Embarrass kept advancing toward the business section and the lowlands of the Wolf.

"Early Tuesday morning the water was flowing in the gutters on Water Street; by noon, the entire sandbags in their doorways to keep the water out. Three blocks of sidewalk was reported caved in and the water was so high at the Elwood Hotel corner that a dog had to swim to cross the street.

The current was so swift on Shawano Street that a team of horses trying to get through had great difficulty making any headway. The wagon they were pulling finally was swept against the curb. It was reported that water was flowing into first floor windows of homes in this area, in a direct line with the overflowing Embarrass River a few blocks north.

Railroad Less Lucky

The Chicago and North Western Railway kept watch for breaks along the right-of-way throughout the whole flood. Service was disrupted briefly coming into New London, but work crews kept the railroad in operation. Many loads of crushed rock were dumped along the right-of-way from New London junction to the main depot. Bags of cinders and sand were piled around bridges; special crews were sent along the line to watch, to check for any indications of danger.

The Green Bay and Western was not so lucky. The tracks from New London to Northport were completely submerged, with the ballast washed out in many places. It was estimated that three weeks would pass before trains could run again on the line.

The waters began to recede the weekend of April 15 and 16. On Monday, April 17, it was reported that the water was down in both New London and Shiocton, but many of the streets were still impassable. Leaders in New London held a meeting April 17 to consider ways to divert the Embarrass River from its course or to contain it when it went on a spring rampage.

Never Again

W. F. Winsey, Post-Crescent farm editor, wrote the tag line on Monday, April 17, 1922, when he said: "The New London flood came, stayed long and was gone. May it never come again is the fervent wish of the people it drove from home and whose property it either destroyed or injured."

And so, the people of New London survived the big flood, but they had to face the sea of mud that was left to clean up.

Danger Not Past

The reporter said that the crest from the Pella dam waters reached New London late that Tuesday and residents believed the danger was past. But the water kept right on coming. It also kept rising throughout the next day. By Thursday, most of the business places had closed up; proprietors piled

The Day Under Your Sign

ARIES (Born March 21 to April 19) — You should enjoy this special day and its many benefits. Join friends for an outing of some sort.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) — Look into something that puzzles you but that you can't "make heads or tails of." You enjoy a challenge.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) — You can take a lot of strain off the coming week if you pre-plan a workable schedule for yourself.

CANCER (June 22 to July 22) — Step forward so others will know what your thoughts are on important family decision.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22) — Intuitive hunch can be relied upon. Something you do now may have a long-range effect on your future.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22) — Someone seems to be misleading you. The key is to be perceptive enough to dig out the whole truth.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) — Although Librans do not express it openly, they need love. Planetary aspects denote plenty of it today!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) — After church, look over your spring wardrobe to see what additions you will need—also what you can pass along.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) — Even this usually free day has many duties and responsibilities. Get them out of the way early in A.M.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) — Loyalty shown to your mate brings fine results. Maintain domestic harmony whatever effort it takes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) — Getting tedious details attended to promptly leaves more time for more pleasant occupations later in day.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) — Don't take others for granted. A kind gesture on your part could result in priceless good will.

ANTI-PERSPIRANT

Inside the Capitol
Jack Olson May Not Be Candidate Again, But He'll Be Active

BY JOHN WYNGAARD
Post-Crescent Madison Bureau

MADISON — It is not likely that Jack Olson, the Republican nominee for governor handily defeated by Gov. Lucey last fall, will figure in future state politics as a candidate.

But the three term lieutenant governor has made it quite plain that he does not intend to retire from political activity altogether.

In his recent speech to the Young Republicans on the UW Madison campus, he seemed to emphasize the line that asserted his intention "in the months ahead to remind the governor and the citizens of the state of the promises made by Candidate Lucey in the 1970 campaign and measure these against performance on each of his actions."

The Olson posture for the moment is one of tolerance and patience while the new regime gets its program underway. He advised the YGOP against intolerant criticism and badgering, and asked for constructive discussion of issues.

Somewhat surprisingly, Olson urged a fair consideration of what is likely to be the most controversial Lucey proposal — the merger of the state university systems.

The governor deserves praise, he said, for putting the issue before the people and the legislature. It should be examined fairly and fully, according to the 1970 Republican ticket leader.

Austerity is the favorite word of politicians in both Wisconsin parties today.

In the state capitol Democrats are preparing for the onslaught of spending pressure groups, as they press for what Gov. Lucey's men call an "austerity" state budget.

A few blocks away in the headquarters of the defeated Republican party there is a true austerity program, under force of necessity as represented by a lean purse and a huge party debt hanging over from the 1968 and 1970 campaigns. Executive Secretary Stanley York informs dues-payers in a current newsletter that he has cut back the staff under his command to 11 persons, which compares with 16 a year ago and 23 only six months ago.

GOP Chairman John Hough is not disguising the degree of trouble in his organization, but he is reminding faint hearts that his party has endured worse times.

"If you doubt that victory is possible in 1972," he writes in the state committee organ, "it might be well to recall our party's position after Goldwater's defeat in 1964. 'At that point who if any of us would have bet any hard cash that a Republican president could be elected in 1968? Yet it did happen,' he reminds the faithful.

The point that Wisconsin is a "swing" state is well taken, although Hough appears to gloss over the fact that in bleak 1964 the Wisconsin GOP nevertheless recaptured control of that strategic bastion of state politics — the governorship — as Warren Knowles won the first of three terms in the face of the Democratic presidential vote landslide.

Periodically there are attacks upon the alleged neglect of the special needs of the handicapped among the state's population of children. But progress is being made, steadily and gradually as the state department of public instruction notes in an inconspicuous corner of its monthly news organ. DPI says there are now 2,342 specialists working in special school programs directed at the handicapped, that the number of children served is growing year by year, and that in 1970-71 the total of such enrollments exceeds 52,000, or at least half of the estimated "potential handicapped" in the 5-18 year old group of the general Wisconsin population.

Many reformist critics in the state have been disappointed about the repeated failure of the legislature to reduce the number of elected county functionaries and about its insistence upon retaining partisan elections for clerks, registers and others.

But Wisconsin follows a national pattern in that regard, as the state legislative reference library illustrates in a recent survey. Elections on party ballots continue in the overwhelming number of states for the recruitment of county officials. Moreover, most states elect a longer list of county officers than does Wisconsin, although it is necessary to note that in some states the county is the basic unit of local government, unlike Wisconsin where incorporated municipalities are the most important. For the country as a whole, the average number of elected county officers is just under 19. In Wisconsin the average is about half of that number. Texas leads the country in the profligacy of its counties and county officials, with 254 and 3,485, respectively.

For a couple of decades after World War II, the cost of earth moving in the state highway program declined as the result of the introduction of new and more powerful equipment. Hence, highway engineers were able to produce better roads per dollar than ever before. But that era has ended. Wage inflation has overcome the effects of increased productivity of machines, with the result that unit prices of construction and notably in the major costs involved in earth moving for principal new routes are steadily rising.

In all the fanfare about tax "redistribution", the fact is often overlooked that there has been a significant redistribution under way for the proceeds of the major state tax source — the income tax. Originally municipalities received half of the payments to the state of individuals and corporations domiciled within their limits. To day the ratio is only 26 per cent.

Most of the decline in the sharing was occasioned by state legislation increasing categorical aids, or tax relief payments. School subsidies, as an example, are paid according to enrollments and local tax resources, rather than according to the origins of the income taxes.

"Redistribution," therefore, is not as novel as the politicians would have their constituents believe. It is merely an extension, or a completion, of a process that has been underway for a quarter of a century without benefit of labeling.

The big headquarters building of the department of natural resources is adorned with two big concrete planters containing ornamental junipers that were planted late last fall and inadequately watered. They are now dying. Among the daily passers-by are foresters who while on duty prepare advice to Wisconsin residents about methods to avoid such losses in their own yards.

In response to a query: The law of Wisconsin does not require a legislature of the size that it now obtains, or 100 assemblymen and 33 senators.

The constitutional provision establishes minimum membership of the assembly at 54, and requires that the senate shall have seats equal to one third that number, or 18 at a minimum. Thus the legislature in its current reapportionment deliberations could settle for a substantial reduction, if it chose to do so. But nobody looks for such a decision.

Too many members would fear losing their places.

The men informally working on a redistricting plan profess optimism about the legislature's ability to achieve it, and thus avoid the embarrassment of having the state supreme court intervene again. But they are speaking only for themselves. A test vote has not yet been taken in either house, and a reliable or realistic assessment of the outlook won't be had for months.

Wisconsin listeners to political talk in Washington report that Sen. Muskie of Maine, usually noted as the front runner for the 1972 Democratic presidential nomination, is thoroughly aware of the probably strategic value of a good showing in the Wisconsin presidential primary a year hence.

Muskie already has a battle plan worked out for Wisconsin. It will show an obvious deference to the critical need for a good showing here in an inevitably critical situation because of the early date of the Wisconsin test, and the symbolic importance of a victory or defeat in this highly representative state. The word is out that he will start hard work here soon — perhaps as early as next month and continue it on a rigidly planned schedule thereafter.

Ruyle Rules Roost In Illinois Township

RUYLE TOWNSHIP, ILL. (AP) —Next Tuesday's election is not expected to change the fact that this is Ruyle territory.

Of the 200 eligible voters in this Jersey County township, 10 per cent are named Ruyle. Only two candidates are on the ballot, T. B. Ruyle for re-election as township supervisor and his cousin, Byron, for road commissioner.

T. B.'s son is town clerk and will handle election matters. T. B. has been supervisor for 19 years. He took over from Chester Ruyle who held the post for 16 years.

An Economics Treatise That Laymen Can Grasp

A Book Review
By J. C. Ogilvie

BETWEEN CAPITALISM AND SOCIALISM: Essays in Political Economics. By Robert L. Heilbroner. Random House, New York. $7.95, cloth-bound; $1.95, paperbound.

This book constitutes a not unusual "once-over-lightly" by Robert L. Heilbroner . . . but is nevertheless interesting to one who does not have the time to become enmeshed in a deep and penetrating study of the science of economics.

Consisting of a collection of essays, with a useful alphabetical index, the volume is the latest in a series by which the author is attempting to transform economics from a dismal science "only for economic majors" into an exciting one that even laymen can comprehend.

"Between Capitalism and Socialism" touches on the race revolution, on social revolution, on the ecological challenge, on the impact of technology, on the psychology of acquisition, on anti-Americanism, on Marxism, on the views of A. A. Berle and J. K. Galbraith . . . and much more.

Marx comes off rather badly in the essay titled "Technological Determinism," as does Russia. The question is posed: "Did the machine-age give us society with the industrial capitalist, or with the industrial manager?" This reviewer feels this may be splitting hairs.

In his essay "The Anti-American Revolution," the author points out the difficulty that needlessly arises in deciding which foreign revolutionary government to support and which to disavow. He deplores the fact that the foreign policy of these United States has too often aided the regime that is out to oppress people, and ups for a more humanitarian policy:

"Indeed, if such a pragmatic and non-interventionist policy could be pursued in the future, a kind of victory could yet be snatched from the otherwise pointless and hideous sacrifices of the Vietnam war."

In the essay titled "Marxism Restated and Reviewed:"

"This leads me to my final point: Marxism is an effort to discover causality in the train of history. I cannot refrain from noting as well another theological attribute of Marxism in its horror of money and exchange, which so emblems that of the Church Fathers contemplating sexuality."

Robert L. Heilbroner is a graduate of Harvard and now chairman of the Department of Economics of the Graduate Faculty of the New School for Social Research. A resident of New York City and Martha's Vineyard, he spends his summers bird watching and writing.

Passover Commemorates Deliverance from Egypt

Dilday Dreaming

By

Chuck Dilday

While the Christian world is entering on the observance of Holy Week, our Jewish neighbors are also preparing for the celebration of one of the principal Hebrew festivals of the year — The Passover.

And so I have asked my friend, Rabbi Dov Edelstein, of Moses Montefiore Synagogue, to write a description of The Passover and its meaning for this Palm Sunday.

Friday night, April 9, is the date of the Passover feast. Below is Rabbi Edelstein's description.

The Jewish Passover By Rabbi Dov Edelstein

No Festival does arouse such soul-stirring emotions as does the Festival of Passover or the Feast of Unleavened Bread. Any Jew who has not completely severed his affiliation with his people would not miss the opportunity to join in the Passover festivities highlighted by the Seder, a combination of narratives, songs, rituals and a festive meal.

Not only is Passover the first of all Jewish Festivals, but it is also the cardinal one inasmuch as it incorporates the essential teachings of Judaism and represents the very history and fiber of the Jewish people.

The theme of Exodus is mentioned in the Bible more frequently than any other event; around it revolve many of the Biblical injunctions and by it most of the ethical laws are explained. At Revelation God introduces himself as "I am the Lord, your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, the house of bondage." The Torah enjoins upon us that we should not mistreat the alien and the stranger "For you were strangers in the land of Egypt." Slavery must be modified and eventually abolished for "They are my servants, whom I freed from the land of Egypt; they may not give themselves over into servitude." The bitter experience of Egyptian bondage forged the ancient Hebrews into a people sensitive to the suffering of others and alert to the principles of social justice. Nor did the influence of the Exodus story limit itself to the Jewish people alone. No doubt, this soul-stirring drama, attesting to the supremacy of the spirit above brute force, has been a termenting factor in the search of many peoples and minorities for their freedom.

The Passover festivities, unlike other holidays which are synagogue centered, are focused toward the home and the family. The Seder — the festive evening meal — is an occasion for family reunion and for inviting guests to share together the joyous event. The spirit of togetherness enhances even more the festival mood.

The preparation of the Seder table requires certain background study since some of the dishes are vested with symbolism. Thus, for example, a green vegetable symbolizes revival and growth while bitter herbs are intended to remind the celebrants of the bitter experiences of their ancestors in Egypt.

The leader of the Seder is also required to be well prepared for this task since it is he who would be expected to render certain explanations on the narrative and on the rituals performed.

The Seder is divided into two parts: The reading of the Haggadah and the meal. The Haggadah is a small book containing the Exodus story interwoven with rabbinical homiletics, hymns, songs and instructions on how to properly conduct a Seder.

When all assembled have taken their seats, the leader, holding a Matzah in his hands, would solemnly declare:

"Behold the Matzah, bread of poverty, which our ancestors ate in the land of Egypt. Let all who are hungry come and eat; all who are needy, come and celebrate the Passover with us."

This opening formula, which is of very ancient origin, sets the tenor of the evening stressing the educational aspects of the Festival.

At this point the youngest participant would rise and, in a melodious voice, direct the "Four Questions" to the leader of the Seder:

"Why is this night different from all other nights? On all other nights we may eat either leavened or unleavened bread, but on this night, only unleavened bread."

Although these questions are learned and memorized in advance, although these same questions have already been asked and answered on previous Passovers, nevertheless, they stir up high emotions and their vigorous freshness is not diminished.

"On all other nights we eat either sitting or reclining, but on this night we recline."

The "Answer", too, is well-known and yet annually carries a fresh breeze of Divine Providence, of renewed hope and of unyielding confidence. For centuries these simple words assuaged the pains of affliction, consoled those who were suffering and instilled in the hearts of the oppressed unflinching faith in the Redemption of the Future. For Passover has been not only a reminder of the past but rather a herald of the future.

"We were once slaves to Pharaoh in Egypt, but the Lord our God brought us forth from there with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm . . . In every generation each Jew should regard himself as though he personally went forth from Egypt . . . It was not only our forefathers whom the Holy One, praised be He, redeemed from slavery, but us also did He redeem together with them."

Haggados printed during the last two decades have incorporated appropriate readings to commemorate the holocaust and the revival of a Jewish State in Israel. In recent years it has become a practice to set apart an empty chair at the Seder table, thus commemorating the Jewish community in Russia who are forcibly isolated and denied civil and religious rights.

Where Have All My Neurons Gone?

By Walt Sandberg

Ever since I read in Scientific American that people approaching their 30's lose 100,000 or more neurons each and every day, I've been up-tight. First of all, I didn't even know what a neuron was. But there I sat losing them. And whatever they were, I knew I, of all people, couldn't afford to lose any: Not even one!

I pondered how this situation could affect my later life. If I waited to retire until age 65, I would lose 1,168,000,000 more neurons, even after subtracting a couple of hundred thousand of whatever they were for leap years.

Right there, I decided to retire instead at 52; at which time I would have sloshed-off a mere 695,500,000 of the things.

That problem disposed of, I decided to find out what it was I was losing at such an alarming rate. I had only to turn to the "N" section of our village dictionary. It stated: "neu-ron (noo'ron) n. Physiol. The fundamental cellular unit of the nervous system: also called a nerve cell."

Oh, no! I could see I was in for real trouble. Imagine! My brain, without my prior knowledge or even consent, indiscriminately tossing around nerve cells like some mad Russian diner eating spaghetti with chopsticks—my nerve cells.

I could plainly see that if I retired at 52, my brain would ultimately diminish to the size of a nut; probably pistachio, somewhat smaller than a peanut. Immediately, I decided against retiring at 52 and upped the date to 45; at which time I would be minus only 438,000,000 more precious neurons.

Then, on a lazy Sunday afternoon in summer, as I mourned my lost neurons before re-runs on the tube, an erstwhile expert on 21st century affairs — Walter Cronkite — appeared on the screen: "Scientists now believe neurons contain quantities of a substance called RNA which controls memory."

"O.K. Cronkite," I pleaded, "give it to me: I can take it!"

"RNA," he explained, "has been injected into white rats in the laboratory. The injected rats were found to be faster learners than their non-treated brethren: They seemed to remember better too."

"Rats!" I echoed. For I had always been a slow learner and even poorer rememberer. If what Conkite said was scientific fact then it was also scientific fact that I had been born with fewer neurons than other people. And seeing that everyone loses them at the same rate, didn't it mean that I would run out of them before anyone else? Of course it did! Having already lost all my nerve, was I now to lose my memory? Indeed I was!

That settled it. I just had to find some neurons to add-to and replace my ever-diminishing supply. But where does one buy a supply of neurons?

A mail-order shopping center perhaps? I tried them first. They had none. The saleslady said I could probably order them from the nearest catalog house in Chicago; but an additional charge would be made for handling and postage. I would even have to pay the state sales tax.

"Lady," I said, "I haven't lost that many neurons yet."

My quest took me to purveyors of the exotic throughout the world, many of whom looked at me as if I had, indeed, lost all of them. But I didn't find any: Not even one!

When I arrived home I dug out a sporting goods mail order Christmas catalog which had been laying about unread since its arrival in July. Excitedly, I scanned each page. If they didn't have any neurons who would? I found elephant hair rings, $1,000 walking sticks and ivory ring-toss game accented in rare jade; even an 1800-pound cast bronze rhino with tick birds on its back. But no neurons. I panicked! What was I to do now?

Then, it hit me. Why hadn't I thought of it before? Of course! The want-ads. So I placed an ad in category 38. It read: WANTED. Neurons of any kind. Willing to pay top dollar. Call WALT. 437-9730.

Well I got a response you wouldn't believe. An insurance agent wanted to work up a comprehensive plan for the retirement of whatever it was I had; plus Blue Cross benefits. And another guy called to say he had one which would fetch my slippers; was housebroken and registered with the Kennel Club and caught mice too.

I'm still looking for some neurons. Got any good ideas?

High on Spring

There is a sweet poison in the air today
A subtle scent of crocus twisting through
The rain-soft earth;
I cannot run from it Escape this hypnotizing atmosphere.
A psychedelic gladness consumes me,
Entranced, I skip, turn cartwheels in the wind,
And fall, exhausted, crying in the grass.
The sun seeps into me,
and in the ground
While all around the meadowlarks sing loud,
Sing shrilly of the winter's final death.
My kite (my children's kite,
now it is mine),
Sails high above our house,
And pulls the string I wound around my palm.
It is a living thing,
it pulses with
A strong desire to leave, to sweep away.
In thought, at least,
I fly with that red kite
Above the warming,
April-morning-earth.
I am addicted to this sunshine drug,
This April-Spring,
this dizzy new-found warmth,
If Spring is life. . .
then live forever, Spring!

The Death of Fog

The sun is after us.
We are hidden in the wet fog but now a glow begins.
We feel it grow against our disbelief.
We are all misty and made of moleculad gray.
We cling to everything we touch.
We move through one another as the dawn moves through the night.
The sunlight burns.
We suffer light.
Death is too much to hold.
We are squeezed dry.

A Leg of Lamb With Wine Sauce

By Melanie De Proft Food Editor

■ Serving lamb for Easter dinner may be a tradition in many homes. For a pleasant change in that menu, prepare a leg of lamb as suggested and accompany it with the sauce au claret. At suppertime or for a late evening buffet, serve the colorful "bonnet salad" with hot crusty bread, cake and fragrant hot coffee.

Roast Lamb with Sour Cream Sauce au Claret

- 4 medium onions, chopped
- 4 medium carrots, pared and sliced
- 2 cups sliced celery
- 3 bay leaves, crumbled
- 1 cup water
- 1 leg of lamb (6 to 7 lbs.)
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1/2 teaspoon seasoned pepper
- 1/2 teaspoon Accent
- Sour Cream Sauce au Claret (see recipe)

1. Toss the onion, carrot, celery and crumbled bay leaf together in a shallow roasting pan. Pour water over vegetables and set lamb, rounded side down, on vegetable mixture.
2. Set in a 500°F. oven for 25 min. Remove from oven and set oven control at 300°F. Turn meat rounded side up; sprinkle with a mixture of the salt, pepper and Accent. Insert a meat thermometer in roast so tip is slightly beyond center of thickest part of meat.
3. Return to oven and continue cooking until thermometer registers 175°-180°F., about 3 hrs. Remove thermometer.
4. Transfer roast to a heated platter and keep it warm. Strain liquid from roasting pan and use about 1 cup for making Sour Cream Sauce au Claret. Garnish platter with spiced crab apples, small bunches of green grapes, and parsley. Accompany with a gravy boat of the sauce.

About 8 servings

Sour Cream Sauce au Claret

- 1 1/2 cups red currant jelly, melted
- 6 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 1/2 cup all-purpose flour
- 1 cup liquid (pan drippings from roast lamb and vegetables)
- 1 1/2 cups claret
- Dairy sour cream (1 to 1 1/2 cups)

1. Heat butter or margarine in a saucepan. Blend in the flour. Adding gradually, stir in the 1 cup liquid until well blended. Bring to boiling, stirring constantly; cook 1 to 2 min.
2. Remove from heat and blend in the melted jelly. Add wine gradually, stirring constantly until gravy is blended.
3. Using as many cups of the gravy as desired (remainder may be chilled and stored in the refrigerator for future use), return the measured amount to heat. Adding in small amounts, and stirring vigorously after each addition, mix in sour cream to taste (about 1/2 cup to 1 cup gravy). Heat thoroughly (do not boil), stirring occasionally.

About 3 cups sauce

Note: If the gravy is refrigerated and stored for future use, add sour cream as directed just before serving. The Sour Cream Sauce au Claret is equally delicious with poultry as with meat.

A handsome roast leg of lamb garnished with parsley sprigs, onion and carrot slices is ready for carving and saucing.

Easter "Bonnet" Salad Buffet

- Chicken in Lemon Aspic
- 12 ham slices, cut in half
- 6 Lettuce "Saucer" Salads
- Stuffed celery, cut diagonally in 3-in. lengths
- Radish roses

1. Unmold Chicken in Lemon Aspic onto a large round plate for the "bonnet crown"; fill center with watercress and top with a few carrot curls.
2. At equal intervals on the shoulder of the plate around the mold (from the base of mold toward edge of plate), place 4 overlapping half-slices of ham.
3. Alternate the 6 Lettuce Saucer Salads with the overlapped ham slices around the plate.
4. Fill any space between salad and ham at edge of plate, tucking in the stuffed celery lengths. Fill any space at the base of salad mold with radish roses and sprigs of watercress.

6 servings

Chicken in Lemon Aspic

- 2 pkgs. (3 oz. each) lemon-flavored gelatin
- 2 cups hot chicken broth
- 2 1/4 cups cold chicken broth
- 2 teaspoons prepared horseradish
- 1 teaspoon minced onion
- Pitted ripe olives, quartered lengthwise
- Green pepper, cut in diamond shapes (same length as olive quarters)
- Cooked white meat of chicken, cut in pieces (about 3 cups)
- 1/2 cup finely chopped celery
- 1/2 cup finely chopped green pepper

1. Empty gelatin into a bowl. Pour in hot chicken broth and stir until dissolved. Stir in cold chicken broth; chill until slightly thickened, stirring occasionally. Blend in horseradish and onion.
2. In bottom of a 2-qt. ring mold, make a design alternating olive quarters, shiny side down, and green pepper diamonds, waxy side down. Spoon some of the slightly thickened gelatin over the design.
3. Immediately mix chicken, celery and green pepper into the remaining slightly thickened gelatin. Carefully spoon into mold over the decorative layer. Chill until firm. 6 servings

Lettuce "Saucer" Salads

Sprinkle paprika in a saucer and dip edges of romaine or Boston lettuce into the paprika for color; arrange the salad greens saucer-fashion into 6 individual servings. Place a thick slice of tomato onto each lettuce "saucer." Top with a small bundle of cooked marinated asparagus tips, a notched cucumber slice, slices of hard-cooked egg, and an avocado wedge. Set in place around salad mold and drizzle with an Italian-style salad dressing.

Fulbright 'Bridges the Gap' With Own Foreign Relations Investigators

EDITOR'S NOTE — In the midst of talk of a "credibility gap", there is a congressional bridge—the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. And while it tries to span troubled waters twist Hill and White House the role of the committee has been changing. It is now much like a "little state department," checking and questioning the executive branch.

By RICHARD E. MEYER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —
Walter Pincus climbed aboard

Fulbright
at Savanahet, and soon the little plane was struggling for altitude over the rice paddies along the Laotian side of the Mekong River.

The pilot, a dashing American lieutenant with a mustache and a silk scarf, pointed the plane toward the middle of the Laotian panhandle, then circled, his eyes searching the teak trees below for a suspected camp of the enemy Pathet Lao.

Strange, perhaps, to find Walter H. Pincus, investigator for a foreign relations subcommittee, riding in a light plane over the enemy's lair in the heart of Indochina. But men like Pincus, seeking first-hand information in sensitive spots, are part of an important change in the U.S. Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

During the Congress recently ended, says Chairman J. William Fulbright, the committee sought for the first time in decades to exercise "a truly independent critical judgement of proposals on foreign and defense policy matters." For years, he says, the committee "tended to go along with the 'facts' presented, the analysis of those facts, and the policy conclusions drawn therefrom by the administration."

Go Everywhere

Now, like a "little state department" with a foreign service of its own, the Foreign Relations Committee dispatches its staff around the world to gather information independent of the executive branch, then draws conclusions of its own. The change, says Fulbright, is vital to "reasserting the constitutional role of the Senate in the determination of foreign policy."

Thus it was, during the first session of the 91st Congress, that Walter Pincus, 37, soft-spoken and bespectacled, found himself seated in a U.S. O-1 next to an American pilot who was spotting targets for Royal Laotians in converted U.S. T28s.

Twice they swung low over the Laotian countryside. They spotted an unusual-looking log across a small stream. The pilot hit it with a smoke marker. Behind him, a Laotian loosed a bomb that screamed toward the water.

Abruptly, the American banked up a wooded slope. The Laotian followed. Down with more smoke. Then more bombs.

The heat was suffocating, and Pincus was getting air-sick. He lost his lunch and his eyeglasses out the window. But he had what he wanted: indisputable evidence that U.S. pilots were flying spotter planes for Laotian bombers. He had ridden with one.

Now neither the State Department, the Defense Department nor the White House could dodge the question.

With fellow investigator Roland Paul, 34, Pincus left for Bangkok. He stopped off for additional investigation in the Philippines. Then he returned to Washington to brief the foreign relations subcommittee on United States security agreements and commitments abroad.

In the Senate, a member of the subcommittee, John Sherman Cooper, a tall, gray-haired Kentucky Republican, was proposing an amendment to a money bill limiting the use of funds for support of Laotian and Thai forces to providing equipment, training and facilities.

But no troops. Cooper said, mindful of Vietnam and trying to prevent another, "start from small beginnings."

Southeast Asia, together with facts they were able to develop in closed committee hearings that October—that the U.S. ambassador in Vientiane was operating as virtual co-commander of fighting in northern Laos; that U.S. warplanes were hitting the North Vietnamese and Pathet Lao in northern Laos with hundreds of strikes a day; that about 200 American lives already had been lost—confirmed what Cooper's aides had been hearing privately: the United States was involved militarily in Laos, not only along the Ho Chi Minh Trail, but, more significantly in terms of creating a military commitment to yet another Southeast Asian nation, along the battlefield in the north, in support of the Laotian government.

In December, Cooper tried again. With another member of the subcommittee, gaunt and scholarly Mike Mansfield of Montana, he offered his amendment to a multibillion-dollar defense appropriations bill.

Would it bar air support? asked Fulbright, who, along with Cooper and Mansfield, had learned about the F105s, F4s and A1s during the subcommittee hearing.

It wouldn't keep U.S. planes from bombing the Ho Chi Minh Trail, replied Mansfield. And it was "moot" whether it would affect the more than 100 sorties per day that U.S. planes were flying in support of Laotian forces elsewhere.

Beyond this, Mansfield couldn't speak without violating the government's classification of information presented at the hearing.

He asked for a secret session of the entire Senate to discuss the matter. And for only the fifth time since World War II, the galleries were cleared.

Quorum was called, and when the secrecy was lifted two hours later, Sen. Frank Church, a boyish-looking Democrat from Idaho, offered a change in Cooper's amendment.

No Ground Troops

"None of the funds appropriated by this act," it said now, "shall be used to finance the introduction of American ground combat troops into Laos or Thailand."

The ban, which came to be called the Cooper-Church amendment, was adopted 80-9. Two days later it was accepted in conference with the House. And the President signed it.

Came spring, and Prince Norodom Sihanouk's regime was overthrown in Cambodia. Cooper and Church tried to extend their ban to Cambodia.

Debate went on and on. Some felt the talk itself was designed to kill the effort.

In the cold, blustery days of December, the waning days of the Congress, the Cooper-Church amendment on Cambodia was finally attached with success to supplemental foreign assistance. It was passed by the Senate, accepted by the House and signed by the President.

It prohibited sending U.S. ground combat troops or military advisers into Cambodia and declared that the United States was not committed to defending the Cambodian government.

Fulbright considers the Cooper-Church amendments among the best examples of the Foreign Relations Committee's new role.

They were authored by committee members, supported with evidence gathered by committee investigators and, in their surviving forms, adopted by the committee without opposition.

"To Fulbright, they represent 'a strong reassertion of the constitutional duty and power of the Congress to keep our foreign military commitments and involvements under legislative control.'"

Other Examples

Nor were they the only examples. Fulbright cites eight such items from the 91st Congress, among them:

—Hearings on the ABM and related weapons systems, on chemical and biological warfare, on military policies and programs in Latin America, and on underground weapons tests, ocean space and Vietnam.

—A resolution on an executive agreement with Spain for U.S. use of bases in that country, declaring that nothing in the agreement "shall be deemed to be a national commitment by the United States."

—A general resolution on national commitments, serving notice that the Senate would no longer acquiesce virtually without question to foreign adventures by the executive.

And these examples from the decade of the '60s, when Fulbright says the influence of the committee grew "substantially" over its influence during the 1950s:

Establishment of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in 1961, when legislative initiative came from Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn., a member of the committee.

—Establishment of the Peace Corps in 1961.

—Passage of the Hickenlooper amendment in 1962, named after committee member Bourke B. Hickenlooper, and providing for suspension of foreign aid to any country that nationalizes, expropriates or seizes property owned by U.S. citizens and refuses for more than six months to pay them.

Indeed, says Fulbright, the entire work of the subcommittee on security agreements and commitments abroad "made a singularly effective contribution" to the Foreign Relations Committee's new role.

The subcommittee was established in 1969 under former Air Force Secretary Stuart Symington, now a Democratic senator from Missouri, to make a detailed review of the nation's international military commitments—particularly those which were "creeping."

"Commitments often 'creep'—or expand beyond their original intent—when U.S. military presence increases in other countries, particularly with the addition of troops."

Back to Reporting

The subcommittee hired Roland Paul, former special assistant to the general counsel at the Pentagon, and Pincus, former investigative reporter for Washington newspapers. In 22 months, they traveled to 25 countries, tapping sources official and private.

Based on their investigations, the subcommittee held 37 days of hearings with 48 witnesses. Testimony covered U.S. military forces, facilities and security programs in 13 countries plus NATO. It filled 10 volumes and totaled more than 2,500 pages.

When the 91st Congress ended and the subcommittee completed its work, Pincus became a newsman again and Paul joined a New York law firm. But 11 persons remain on the professional staff of the Foreign Relations Committee, each able to be dispatched on assignment.

Half travel fairly regularly, including investigators Richard Moose and James Lowenstein, former foreign service officers, who spent time in Vietnam and in Paris in December of 1969 and returned to report on pacification, Vietnamization and negotiations; left for Cambodia shortly before the U.S.-South Vietnamese incursion last May and returned to challenge President Nixon's assertion that Vietnamization had been threatened by a massive Communist buildup in the Cambodian sanctuaries; then returned to Cambodia last December to report that a program of U.S. military assistance "was under way to the extent of $100 million."

Foreign visits might not be so necessary, staff members say, if the committee could depend upon the executive branch for complete and accurate information.

Staff members say other information is accurate but incomplete. They recall Secretary of State William Rogers' appearance before the committee last April. To a man, committee members cautioned against U.S. involvement in Cambodia. Rogers told them the administration was apprehensive about initiating a large aid program, but said nothing about plans to march U.S. troops into the Cambodian sanctuaries two days later. "Partial truth," says one member of the staff, "is an evasion of truth."

Sometimes the executive branch simply refuses information—flatly and absolutely.

Most often, though, say committee aides, the executive branch keeps information secret by classifying it.

"This is partly the result of bureaucratic timidity," the subcommittee noted in its final report. "Especially at middle and lower levels, where the prevailing approach is to look for some reason either to cover up or to withhold facts."

Over-Classify

"At least as important, this tendency to over-classification is but part of the process of 'creeping commitments,' frequently done at the request of a foreign government because the latter desires to keep a particular agreement or program secret from its own people . . .

"The dissembling to which the Congress and the American people have been subjected, however, cannot be attributed entirely to foreign governments. In the beginning, the executive branch of the United States, as much as the governments of the Philippines and Thailand, desired to keep secret the arrangements under which Filipino and Thai troops were sent to Vietnam . . .

"This was pure deception,

Objects to Mayor's Stand On Welfare Department

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

The persecution of welfare recipients by Mayor Buckley is determined to continue with the facts unknown to the taxpayer. As in the days of Christ, the poor, disabled, mentally retarded and ill are still considered ("Welfare Leeches" as the Mayor put it) by many persons in our society, while the tragic problems of this group, Mayor Buckley and society fail to note. The Mayor has failed to inform himself an how and what qualifies one for welfare, the pitiful small amount one must live on, and why Appleton must care for the families of the unemployed during this economic recession. Welfare is both a legal and political problem.

The 1969 budget cuts of ADC initiated by Froehlich and Conradt have resulted in the local Appleton taxpayers supplying the funds for the unemployed. Welfare is not given to the unemployed until compensation and savings are depleted and these fathers will try very hard to work before they risk losing possessions and savings, and running into debt living on small compensation payments. Welfare records with name, address, and amount of welfare are open to the public. The Heart Fund Appreciates Fine Support

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

On behalf of the Appleton Heart Fund, I wish to thank everyone involved for making the 1971 Heart Fund Drive a resounding success. I know that this effort could not have gone over the top without the generous contributions of the good people of Appleton, and the work of more than 1200 volunteers who dedicated a portion of their valuable time to getting the job done.

Now, the Wisconsin Heart Association will be able to continue its fight against heart disease, the "greatest single cause of death in our state. While the battle is not yet won, let us hope that the demonstrated interest and support of our city will encourage progress in the future to match the great strides made in the past.

recipient is informed who looked at his record. Personal details are not relayed to anyone. Our Mayor regards it a privilege to live on welfare rather than a need for food, clothing and shelter. The average taxpayer does not know how much a recipient receives to live on. He thinks the amount is more than he makes working and if that amount doesn't stretch the welfare director is free to dish out more welfare.

The welfare director is portrayed as Santa Claus with taxpayer funds. He is governed by welfare law as to disbursement of funds. Our group has had excellent cooperation by these officials in informing us as to what welfare is about and I am sure they would be very happy to inform Mayor Buckley if the Mayor would care to learn. I suggest the Mayor check who is paying his support for the family, while he is having "his seltzer."

Our county spent $1,153,857.51 in AFDC and collected $109,210.15 in support fees. Our private attorneys do not prosecute non-support cases for starving kids when the mothers have no money to pay, however if the father is deceased by accident they don't mind suing anyone and everyone if the kids can collect a fund to revert 30-50 per cent back in legal fees and the local banks take a sizeable fee setting up the trust fund. These same banks would not loan money to a mother with starving kids, bills and no job when the father has deserted them. At the death of the father the children usually get twice the amount in social security payments compared to support or welfare. Social security is in our federal welfare budget but the taxpayer does not consider it welfare, he considers it government insurance. Either way welfare comes out of taxes. The federal budget is termed "Health, Education and Welfare." The greatest portion is spent on education, not welfare. The collection of non-support (welfare) when these fathers (if they ever are sentenced by Judge Van Susteren) under the Huber law has met with excellent results. However (political reasons) our county board has refused to build a jail to implement this phase of welfare.

It is more blessed to give than to receive. Unless our Mayor has money enough to live on the rest of his life in the event of ill health he too could become a welfare recipient.

Reasons Listed for Opposing State Aid to Private Schools

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

Wake up, Wisconsin.

The Wisconsin Legislature is faced with demands for legislation to provide tax aid for parochial schools. Senate Bill 138 would provide this "parochial" in the form of state grants to parochial school students, which could pay up to 80 per cent of parochial school tuition and cost Wisconsin taxpayers $38 million during the first two years.

Parochial in any form should be rejected by Wisconsin citizens and lawmakers for many reasons:

1. Parochial would violate every citizen's right to the "free exercise of religion," his right not to be taxed for the support of any religious institution, not even his own. Parochial schools, whether Roman Catholic or of other faiths, are religious institutions. They exist primarily for the purposes of sectarian indoctrination and separatism.

2. Parochial would be government establishment and preferment of the one large, wealthy church seeking tax aid for its schools, and which would receive most of the funds under any parochial plan. It would mean government discrimination against the vast majority of citizens and churches not seeking tax aid for private, special interest schools.

3. Parochial would divert public funds away from our hard-pressed public schools. It would subsidize the growth and proliferation of nonpublic schools, which practice many kinds of selectivity and discrimination, and reduce public schools to "dumping grounds" for religious and racial minorities, the poor and the disadvantaged, handicapped and problem children. The public school, the keystone of American democracy, would be wrecked.

4. Parochial makes no sense economically. Tax support of a multiplicity of duplicative private and separatist school systems in addition to the public school system would mean higher taxes and educational inefficiency. Remember, too, that if $38 million in parochial is proper, there will be nothing to stop it from rising in a few years to complete parochial school support costing Wisconsin taxpayers more than $250 million per year.

5. Parochial would subsidize separatism and religious and racial imbalance. Wisconsin public school enrollment is 4 per cent Negro; Catholic school enrollment only 0.7 per cent Negro. Parochial would worsen public school racial balance problems. Wisconsin Catholic schools are 97.6 per cent Catholic in enrollment; other parochial schools are similarly separatist. Tax subsidy for separatism and segregation is unjust and unconstitutional and can only harm interfaith and community harmony.

6. Parochial is unnecessary. Only one parochial school system is demanding tax aid and it is operated by the wealthiest church in America. According to Catholic Bishop William McManus, a member of President Nixon's panel on school finance, Catholic school problems are more psychological and theological than financial.

7. Parochial is unwanted. On November 3, 1970, the citizens of Michigan and Nebraska voted overwhelmingly in referendum to reject parochial. Opinion polls show similar opposition throughout the country. A large and increasing number of Catholics oppose parochial and a great many want parochial schools "phased out." At least 60 per cent of Catholic families send their children to public schools. Many Catholic representatives are telling legislators around the country that parochial is government interference in an internal church controversy: it is government intervention against Catholics who want their church's priorities realigned, or who are withholding donations responsive to the wishes of parishioners.

8. Parochial violates the First Amendment to the U. S.

Don't Buy Colored Chicks for Easter

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

Again this year at Easter time hundreds of Easter chicks will live in colored splendor for a few days in Fox Valley homes as Easter pets, toys or novelties. Nearly all Easter pets — chicks, ducklings and bunnies — die shortly after Easter from the unnatural environment or from mishandling, improper food, starvation or from just plain neglect.

By the time the chicks' color begins to fade and the kids are back in school the novelty wears off. The few that manage to survive in city homes must be disposed of, some way since city ordinances ban the keeping of chickens or ducks in the city. Those that don't get disposed of with the garbage begin arriving at humane society shelters a few days after Easter, with the weak suggestion "Maybe some farmer will want them." No farmer wants a few sickly Easter chicks to infect their healthy flocks.

Fifteen states including Michigan and Minnesota have passed laws banning the sale of Easter chicks. More than 125 cities have ordinances banning their sale as "pets." Efforts by Animal Welfare League to encourage similar ordinances in our area have so far been fruitless although the cities of Oshkosh, Milwaukee, Kenosha and Menomonee Falls have such ordinances.

We urge parents and grandparents, uncles and aunts to buy inanimate Easter toys for the children. This is a protest against cruelty, and the possibility of contacting disease, that would be understood by those establishments that display living Easter pets.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly said that: "Neither (a state nor the Federal Government) can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another . . . No tax, in any amount large or small, can be levied to support any religious activities or institutions, whatever they may be called, or whatever form they may adopt to teach or practice religion."

Article I of the Wisconsin Constitution's bill of rights, which stipulates that: "nor shall any money be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of religious societies, or religious or theological seminaries." SB 138 is designed to keep parochial schools in business and their primary business is sectarian instruction.

How About Geese as Polluters?

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

I would like to say a word about pollution, and what is the cause of a lot of it. I think we overlook nature as one of our biggest polluters. In about a week the geese will be flying north to nest, and they will set for a week or two on our lakes and rivers on their way north to nest. If you ever have raised geese you know how dirty they are, and how much dirt a few geese can make over night. When this dirt starts to move it is no wonder our lakes are green in the summer time.

I also think the land that is in the Kennedy program is an air polluter because it grows up to weeds and the pollen blows all over in the air and causes pollution. Why not put this land in use and raise a crop to feed some poor hungry soul that is starving?

Is Motherhood Outmoded?

There are a few concepts, such as the flag, motherhood and God, generally considered too sacred to criticize. But motherhood is now coming in for some hard knocks.

Part of the reason may be the concern over the population explosion by advocates of zero population programs. Part may stem from the Women's Liberation movement. Some of it, too, may come from the fact that household appliances and new methods of food preparation mean that keeping house need not necessarily be a full-time job.

But some of the statements from those who say motherhood is changing are not likely to be heartily received by everyone.

Dr. Beverly Mead, chairman of the Psychiatric Department at the Creighton School of Medicine, says that, "it is dreadful for a woman to spend her life, first as someone's daughter, then as somebody's wife, and finally as somebody's mother." The whole business of emphasis upon motherhood Dr. Mead believes developed so that women would adapt to an inevitable biological fate. Conditions are changing, Professor Mead conceded, "but we are still dragging along the chains of inappropriate concepts such as the beauty and sacredness of motherhood. Twenty years ago a mother's biggest job was to create a secure and loving home — a well lined nest — for her offspring. That's still necessary and desirable, but I want to emphasize that it's no longer enough to do just that. A fulfilled woman can no longer make a career of being a mother."

All of this may be very true. Besides there are women who are simply not cut out to be mothers, either because of physical or psychological handicaps. They may well find fulfillment in another field.

But there are others who simply like it and for whom being a full time mother is not just an escape from what some people consider to be more important projects. And anyone who has been one in the last couple of decades knows that the dilution of activities for children have to some extent at least replaced the household chores. Maybe there are too many such activities and they certainly break into the family schedules but to pretend they do not exist and often mean a full time job for mom is to ignore reality.

Besides there's the matter of being a wife as well.

Hitch-Hiking Is Legal

The question of the legality of hitchhiking has been in the news recently, so as a public service The Post-Crescent quotes the Wisconsin statute on the subject:

"No person shall be on a roadway for the purpose of soliciting a ride from the operator of any vehicle other than a public passenger vehicle."

Thus the act of hitch-hiking is not against the law. It is a question of where a hitch-hiker stands to solicit a ride.

The statutes further define roadway as meaning "that portion of a highway between the regularly established curb lines or that portion which is improved, designed or ordinarily used for vehicular traffic, excluding the berm or shoulder."

Thus it is legal for a hitch-hiker to solicit a ride if he stands back of the curb line or on the shoulder of a highway.

A New Everest Expedition

Another expedition is setting out, this time an international one, on a mission that seems foolhardy, almost ridiculous, and yet thrilling enough to catch the attention of much of the world.

Mount Everest was finally conquered in 1953 by Edmund Hilary and Tensing Norkey. Since then probably four or five other teams have made it to the top. The number is somewhat in doubt because China claims its team reached the summit in 1960 but this is under dispute. The new group consists of a 13 nation, 29 man and one woman team and they plan to take a different and more difficult route. Already a base camp has been established at about 17,000 feet. But those last 12,000 feet are the most difficult — and the new planned route includes 2,600 feet of almost vertical rock.

The only woman on the team is Yvette Vaucher from Switzerland whose husband, a mathematics teacher, is also on the trip. One American, John Evans, may be the leader over the dangerous face climbing part of the trip but his wife plans to remain at the base camp.

This type of adventure continues to demonstrate the individual's effort to conquer some aspect of the world's natural dangers, even in an electronic age. Thus we have had Kon Ra II, the papyrus boat which crossed the Atlantic. There was the Englishman who rowed across, something which didn't even occur to Columbus, although it may have to earlier men who came to this side of the Atlantic. And there was a young man in his teens who sailed, mostly alone, in a small boat around the world. We have had and continue to have Arctic and Antarctic explorers, those who go by dog team or under the ice in submarines. There are ski expeditions by helicopter to remote areas although conditions at more accessible places are just as good. There is a new hotel going up in Nepal and the only way so far to get to it is by helicopter shuttle. And, although with a lesser degree of danger, there are long distance swimmers, the joggers and a myriad of other competitors who set conditions and trials for themselves and try to win.

Sometimes there is valuable scientific and historic information to be found in such exploits. We know now that a papyrus boat could have crossed the Atlantic centuries ago. We know that there may have been a West to East crossing of the Pacific as well as the other way around. And most of all we learn anew what man can do if his dedication and determination are strong enough.

We hope the Everest party makes it. One thing it could prove again is that representatives of different nations can cooperate when the stakes are high enough.

Extremism Rules Northern Ireland

The major threat to some sort of settlement in Ireland is the extremist, whether he happens to be a member of the outlawed Irish Republican Army which has been dormant for so long or a fanatical anti-Catholic.

Unless the extremists can be kept under control — and the senseless murder of three young British soldiers does not offer much hope unless there is widespread revulsion because of it — there is every chance that England will insist upon complete control in the six northern counties usually called Ulster. This would mean more British troops and antagonism in the north as well as the south. In fact, the British might find themselves battling irate citizens of the southern and largely Roman Catholic Republic of Ireland and members of the northern constabulary, virtually all Protestant. It would be a long time in such an event before the antagonisms died away.

Currently there are high level conferences going on in England on just what to do about the situation since the resignation of Prime Minister Chichester-Clark in Ulster. Even though his successor, Brian Faulkner, is also a moderate and his election at least indicated some sense among the members of Ulster's parliament, the change was upsetting. The frustration over the entire situation was indicated when Enoch Powell suggested that perhaps if citizens of the Republic of Ireland could be declared aliens in England the government would see to it that the IRA remained banned in action as well as word. The Irish now can enter England without any passport problem, can work there and even send most of what they make back home. The privilege is open to them even though the Republic more than twenty years ago declared itself not even a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations, much less a dominion.

The governmental situation in Ulster is also somewhat confusing. It is not actually a part of Britain but of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. But when the Republic declared itself completely free and independent, a new Ireland Act was passed declaring not only that "Northern Ireland remains part of His Majesty's dominions and of the United Kingdom," but that "in no event will Northern Ireland or any part thereof cease to be part of His Majesty's dominions and of the United Kingdom without the consent of the parliament of Northern Ireland." This would certainly rule out any federation between the two parts of Ireland, at least until tempers have cooled down considerably. Since they have remained high for something like 300 years when British and Scottish moved into the northern counties it's not likely that passions will disappear in a hurry.

Despite the discrimination and the fanatics, it is a ridiculous situation. It's a clear demonstration that when a country comes under the real influence of the extremists, there is bound to be serious trouble.

Fox River Cleanup Only an Idea; Needs Support of Basin Factions

Editor, The Post-Crescent: Articles in the March 18 and 28 editions of The Post-Crescent create the impression that the federal Environmental Protection Agency "... is seriously considering spending as much as it takes — perhaps $100 million — to quickly clean up the Fox River" as a national demonstration. Unfortunately this isn't so. There is still very important work to be done on the local level before we come near to "serious consideration."

The March 18 article states: "... officials reportedly are high on making it one of the projects because of local interest and an advanced locally developed management program." Checking with David Wagoner of the EPA (he asked we correct the wrong spelling Wagner), we found that he has received no detailed management proposal from anyone in Wisconsin. He said eventually he must receive a proposal which is comprehensive and brings together all information and all organizations affecting the Fox River basin before his office can go very far in determining which river in the U. S. will get the demonstration grant.

The Post-Crescent stated: "The Fox came under consideration last year when '... the Fox Valley Council of Governments wrote the agency.'" Mr. Wagoner reported that in addition to that letter, he had received letters from Senator Nelson and others asking the Fox River be chosen. The Northeastern Wisconsin Regional Planning Commission has also written in support of the Fox River project, forwarding to Mr. Wagoner a copy of its 287 page report, "Water Quality and Flow of Streams in Northeastern Wisconsin" which includes detailed information on a good portion of the Fox River basin.

The March 28 article says area educational technicians "... have been working with COG public works director, Lawrence Michaels, since last year in developing a procedure for the management project on the Fox." Dr. William Sloey of Wisconsin State University-Oshkosh, a member of Michaels' group says they have met once on this subject, recently.

A situation The Post-Crescent doesn't point out is that presently there are three important programs zeroing in on the Fox River Basin which are mutually complementing, yet presently unconnected:

1. Mr. Thomas Frangos, Environmental Protection Division of the Wisconsin State Department of Natural Resources reports that pollution abatement orders have been issued along the length of the Fox River.

2. Wisconsin State Representative Lewis T. Mitnick, chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee is contemplating a special legislative investigation of the pollution of the Fox River in response to a petition signed by over 600 Fox Valley residents.

3. The federal Environmental Protection Agency is considering the Fox River along with several others for a large grant to clean up the Fox as a national demonstration.

Also, the newspaper doesn't point out the urgent need for bringing together all the information and all the agencies concerned with the Fox River so that a strong, unified, comprehensive plan of action with universal state and regional support can be presented to the Environmental Protection Agency. If we can do this, without consideration of political prerogatives, we might get the federal money to restore the Fox River. If we can't, we may lose out.

The Wolf River and Lake Winnebago feed into the Fox. What good does it do to clean up the Fox River if we don't have its source water under control? Calumet, Fond du Lac, and Winnebago Counties all front on Lake Winnebago. The Wolf River runs through eight counties reaching north to Forest County. The Fox runs through Outagamie and Brown. Surely there is a role for these entities in a $100 million river basin cleanup! Surely the federal government wants to attack the entire problem, not just the part of the Fox River that flows through a few of the larger cities between Appleton and Green Bay!

This is a big project. It's going to take big thinking to secure it for our region. There is no room for pettiness or exclusionary thinking in the planning and organizing of the detailed management proposal which must be forthcoming from the state and region to the Environmental Protection Agency.

With investigative, complete, unbiased reporting the local area newspapers can bring out all the facts and their proper relationship on this important matter so that the most good can be done for the most people.

Woman Should Have Choice on Abortion

Editor, The Post-Crescent: I'm seeing and hearing so much in today's news about the abortion laws that I feel that I must write.

I'm an average housewife with two children and I doubt if I'd ever want an abortion, but I would like to know that I had a choice. I do not feel that anyone has the right to tell me to have a child that I do not want, or for some reason cannot have.

Who is to say if it is right or wrong? I feel that if your conscience says its the best thing for you, then it is. No one has to live with your conscience but yourself.

Why can't the people that are speaking out so strongly against it understand that no one is telling them they have to have an abortion because the law says they can, but at least it's there if they want it. Let the ones that do need an abortion have it and the ones that don't need it or want the law changed, leave their noses out of the people's lives that do.

Too many times it's the people that are against it the loudest, that secretly wish they could do the thing they're talking against. Some say "never!" outside, while inside, at the same time, they're thinking about which doctor, should the need arise, to call for their self.

Again, I may be only one person, but I say let the people that want it have it. The ones that don't, well no one's forcing them.

But at least we will have a choice.

Sex Segregation in Employment Ads Eliminated by P-C

The Post-Crescent this week initiated a change which we believe is an improvement in service in the employment classifications of our want ad columns.

Traditionally, advertising for employment was divided into three classifications, Help Wanted — Male; Help Wanted — Female; and Help Wanted — Male-Female.

We became convinced that these classifications no

BY JOHN TORINUS
Editor, The Post-Crescent

longer fit current conditions in the job market where women are seeking, obtaining and holding many employment positions which once were regarded as the exclusive jurisdiction of men.

In addition, the segregation of employment advertising by sex violated the spirit if not the letter of the law. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 added sex as a consideration in employment discrimination to the traditional considerations of age, race, creed, color, national origin or ancestry. Wisconsin statutes were amended to conform.

The courts have held that newspapers cannot be coerced by the government into becoming enforcers of the discrimination statutes, and that the responsibility for justifying a sex preference in employment advertising is up to the employer. And on the basis of these court decisions many newspapers have felt justified in continuing the practice of segregating such ads by sex.

But The Post-Crescent has decided to pioneer in Wisconsin in eliminating the sex headings in its employment advertising, although reserving to advertisers the privilege of specifying a sex preference in their individual ads if they wish to and feel justified in doing so.

In place of the former three classification headings, we are now using nine classification headings in employment advertising.

We believe this provides a better service to readers in seeking and locating job opportunities which interest them or for which they feel qualified. And since it is a convenience to readers, it is also a benefit to advertisers.

Now the only remaining problem is the job market itself, which has shrunk considerably in this area in recent months. And as a result the volume of employment advertising has also dwindled. But at least we'll be ready when the expected upturn in employment opportunities occurs, hopefully, later this year.

The contractor started digging Wednesday for the expansion and modernization of The Post-Crescent plant.

It was a happy day for all of us involved in production of the newspaper. The project has been in the planning stage for almost three years now and it was a great relief to proceed from planning to construction.

Construction work will take the better part of two years, since remodeling and renovation of the present building must necessarily be delayed until the new addition is completed and occupied. It will cause considerable inconvenience to all our employees, but we are all more than willing to put up with this for the advantages the new building and equipment will offer.

The Post-Crescent was extremely fortunate to acquire the services of John Miner to head up our Oshkosh news bureau. John was the last survivor of the editorial staff of The Paper, and became available when that operation shut down completely.

Prior to working for The Paper, John was an editorial staff employee of the Northwestern for almost 20 years so he is intimately familiar with the Oshkosh area and its news needs. Miner and veteran reporter Edith Bock give us a very strong staff in Oshkosh.

State Support Will Hurt Effectiveness of Church

Editor, The Post-Crescent:

We hear much these days about the drive to get financial aid from the state for parochial schools. This drive is largely made by the Catholic Church and many of its members. It could be considered part of the popular sport of getting at the public trough. To be sure expenses for supporting schools on all levels have been going higher and higher; the end is nowhere in sight. But is taxpayers' money the right answer for them?

I belong to a Lutheran Church of the Wisconsin Synod. Our congregation operates a new grade school. Our Synod opened more new schools in 1970 than in any year of its history. We are much in favor of parochial schools and are willing to work, work and sacrifice to maintain them. The rewards are great and long lasting. We don't want the taxpayers of the state to help support our schools.

Because we have parochial schools we are familiar with the financial burden and all other problems that go with them. We can sympathize fully with our Catholic friends but submit respectfully that getting state aid is the wrong solution to the problem.

One of the most interesting and puzzling aspects of the whole situation is the apparent lack of vision and perceptiveness on the part of the leaders of the Catholic Church. They want millions and millions of public money to support a school system which their own people are unwilling or unable to support. These leaders should realize that by accepting public funds the spiritual effectiveness of the church will decrease and will in time be destroyed. Is it worth the price?

Half are teen-agers, according to crime reporter Alan Hynnd, and three out of four are girls. Half of the perpetrators are from better neighborhoods, and women outnumber men, two to one. Many ex-clusive stores, in the past, hesitated to upset their prosperous patronage and so did little to prosecute. In the glass department of a Beverly Hills department store, a young couple was trying to complete the birthday shopping for the wife's grandmother. The clerk showed them several attractive items in the price range they had mentioned, then stood back to give them a chance to talk things over. "Darling," the husband said, "let's get your grandmother this ashtray." "But honey," the pretty wife replied, "we can't give Grandmother an ashtray. Great-grandmother doesn't even know she smokes!" —Don Bennett

"We want to test your aptitude for accounting"

The International Accountants Society, Inc., invites you to take this free test which tells if you can work with numbers—as accountants do. It could start you on the road to a prestige career in one of the most exciting areas of today's business world.

by Donald R. Morrison

Donald R. Morrison, CPA, is the President of the International Accountants Society, Inc. His experience covers both public and private accounting, and includes government work as a comptroller for the U.S. Army. He has also taught accounting subjects at Ohio Wesleyan University.

HERE IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY to discover whether you have aptitude in one of the world's best-paid professions—accounting. All you need do is take our free Accounting Aptitude Test at home, in your spare time. We'll tell you if you can be trained in this rewarding field.

No reputable school can promise success, but thousands of people who have taken this test, and developed their skill through our training, have gone on to successful careers as accountants, office managers, auditors, controllers and business executives. It makes no difference what kind of job you have now. If you have a high school diploma or equivalent—if you like working with figures—then one of the world's best-paid careers may be open to you. And you can go as high in the business world as your ability will take you. Accounting training opens the door to every business—to executive positions right up to top management—because accounting is such a vital part of every business today.

Accountants wooed and rewarded

The ever-growing needs of American industry have created an almost constant demand for more trained accountants. Today, and for years to come, accounting offers a real incentive for ambitious men and women who are in humdrum, dead-end jobs. It may offer you the opportunity to say goodbye forever to scrape-along salaries. And once you learn accounting you'll have a valuable skill no one can take away from you for the rest of your life. In good times or bad, accountants are almost always in demand.

How you learn the skills of accounting

Since 1903, the International Accountants Society, Inc., has trained many thousands of men and women to become accountants. It is the largest and oldest home-study school devoted exclusively to the teaching of accounting and allied subjects.

One key to the school's success is its practical technique of teaching: you learn by doing. You do the kind of things accountants do—face similar problems—just as though you were learning on the job. This is not only a more effective way to learn, it is highly enjoyable. You see your skills grow, lesson by lesson. And every step of the way, you are guided through the mail by faculty members who are all Certified Public Accountants.

Here's what students say

This personalized training has helped men and women all over the country find prestige jobs in accounting. Here is what some of them say:

"In the last five years my earnings have more than doubled as a result of my studies with IAS."—Mrs. Louise J. Moore, Olympia, Washington

"My first IAS assignment made accounting even more interesting than I could ever imagine it would be. Between the time I started your course and completed it, I received raises totaling $65.00 weekly."—Arthur E. Rose, Fairfield, New Jersey

"My thanks to International Accountants Society which I sincerely believe is in a very large part responsible for the success I have enjoyed in the business world. . . . I feel that my small investment of time and money in the IAS course could increase my potential lifetime earnings by a very substantial amount."—John J. Keepers, Wau-pun, Wisconsin

"Your home study course has enabled me to obtain my present position, which has resulted in a very substantial increase in earnings."—Thomas E. Cook, Phoenix, Arizona

Major firms use our training

Companies like National Cash Register, General Mills, Standard Brands, Campbell's Soup, Westinghouse and many others use the International Accountants Society to train their own employees in accounting procedures. Many former students hold top positions with leading corporations and the government.

CHILDREN'S TALES

The Special Mr. Reggie Frog

PART III

AFTER SEVERAL DAYS OF RAIN, REGGIE FROG DECIDED TO SEE IF THE OLD POND WAS FLOODED. FOR IT WAS A PERFECT DAY FOR A SWIM.

AS REGGIE HOPPED ALONG - FIVE FEET AT A TIME, OF COURSE - MR. ERNEST BEAVER AND MR. HERBERT RABBIT WERE SUNNING THEMSELVES AT THE OLD POND, TOO.

"HELLO, REGGIE," ERNEST AND HERBERT CALLED. REGGIE GRINNED AT THEM CONCEITEDLY AS HE FLEW THROUGH THE AIR ON ONE OF HIS FAMOUS FIVE-FOOT JUMPS.

BUT REGGIE'S FIVE-FOOT JUMP LANDED HIM RIGHT ON THE ROAD! AND FARMER ALLEN'S JALOPY WAS SPLASHING DOWN THE MUDDY ROAD RIGHT AT REGGIE! SO TO AVOID THE AUTO'S HUGE TIRE, REGGIE USED HIS SPECIAL TALENT AND JUMPED FIVE FEET...

AND LANDED RIGHT IN FRONT OF THE OTHER FRONT WHEEL WHICH WAS EXACTLY FIVE FEET AWAY.

WELL, POOR REGGIE WAS MASHED INTO THE MUDDY RUT BY THE SPEEDING TIRES.

ERNEST AND HERBERT SAW ALL THIS AND RAN TO REGGIE AS QUICKLY AS THEIR LEGS COULD CARRY THEM.

THEY DRAGGED REGGIE OUT OF THE MUD COUGHING AND SPUTTERING. "WE'LL TAKE YOU HOME AND YOU'LL BE YOURSELF IN NO TIME," SAID ERNEST. BUT REGGIE HAD LEARNED A LESSON. "THANKS, FRIENDS," HE CROAKED, "BUT I'M GOING TO BE MY OLD SELF AGAIN, THE WAY I WAS BEFORE I BECAME SO SPECIAL!"

Nuns Blossom in New Roles

BY MAIJA PENEKIS
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

Whatever happened to the nuns with the head gear that made you wonder if they had ears: the nuns who taught school during daylight hours and then quietly melted into their convents when evening fell?

They shortened their garb, minimized or got rid of the veil, and joined the world of the 1970's with a voice that's heard all the way to Rome. That's what happened.

From a world which was an enigma to the layman, in a matter of years they leapt into public headlines some full of praise for their ways and apostolates, many of them controversial.

"The circumstances dictate that we be more with people. So we joined the world," commented Sister Catherine Lyons, principal of St. Mary School, Appleton, a Sinssinawa Dominican whose habit consists of a simple light-colored dress and a cross.

And so, you have the headlines: "Nun Named Conspirator in Alleged Plot to Kidnap a White House Official."

That's almost enough to demonstrate the point that they went Vatican II to heart. They took into the ghettos full force; established migrant apostolates; took part in peace marches.

There was Sister Lucy Paciana, dean of women at St. Leo College in Florida, who became the mayor to clean up the town and get some action on much-needed programs.

At the same time, a member of the St. Joseph of Carondelet Order, which runs OSHKOSH — Yesterday's job might be obsolete tomorrow.

University graduates are learning that even the familiar professions like accounting or engineering need periodic updating.

Richard J. Turzanski, Oshkosh State University placement director advises the high school senior contemplating college to develop a keen awareness that the market place is changing rapidly and that new careers are being born daily.

"They're going to have to do more than complete the work for their baccalaureate degrees. These men and women are going to have to identify the kinds of jobs they can slot into. They must seek all kinds of information as fresh and sophisticated as possible. They must conduct a personal search for information."

Turzanski holds industry, the university, and job counselors responsible for helping with the search. "I'm not too sure the tools are available to these young people," he warned.

As society becomes more technical, the dictionary of jobs gets bigger and bigger.

"The institution has a responsibility, as does industry, to identify the jobs. I've never been able to understand why the employer can project capital outlay for five years and doesn't project his human capital needs for the same period.

"Career counseling has always used hindsight. That's not good enough for today's market."

A career counselor has to keep a finger on the pulse, talk to the people who are hiring people. We all missed the advent of the computer industry completely and there are some things like a million jobs there today.

Maybe Ecology "What frightens me in the 70s is that somewhere out there is another embryo due for a similar growth, and I can't identify it. Maybe it's the ecology thing."

Gordon Stein, a graduate counseling student serving as intern, suggested the construction industry as the place to look for a parallel to the computer industry.

"There will have to be major changes there to meet our requirements," he said. "Some day I see a bright young man taking what's been done here and abroad, techniques already known, and setting up to solve the housing and building problems of the country."

Some of the changes are already clear, Turzanski predicts.

During the 70s, he said, he expects the number of university trained people required in direct manufacturing positions to decrease in actual numbers.

He anticipates a strong emphasis, however, in the area of service. "The university's share of this would be in sales. Increasing numbers of university people will be needed to get the goods into the hands of the consumer."

This year alone he estimates a 15 per cent increase in recruiting here for retail management jobs. "They're searching for liberal arts and business administration majors," Turzanski said. "Companies like to, agents. 'I don't know of another train their own, but they want employer who is looking for people who have proved themselves trainable.'"

The decade will bring new jobs for the university graduate, Turzanski said that over the long in the field of law enforcement, pull there will be more jobs in too, he continued. He said the that sector for the university Federal Bureau of Investigation trained person. He sees gov-is currently recruiting 1,000 new government recruits more highly qualified people.

He would urge high school graduates to look sharply at the paramedical field where people are needed in greater numbers and new kinds of jobs are developing.

Currently, the need for professional nurses here is spotty.

Fewer Firms Recruiting

OSHKOSH — Jobs are fewer, competition is tougher, and the university senior, brand new diploma almost in hand, is worried.

At Oshkosh State University, Richard J. Turzanski, director of placement, said the number of companies recruiting on campus was down almost 30 per cent in February and March from a year ago.

Last year, OSU placement services managed to about match the pace of previous years although the situation was softening elsewhere. Representatives of 103 companies had jobs to offer here. This year, the number was down to 73.

The companies sent 129 recruiters compared with the 158 of last year, the two-month period provided 1,663 interviews with OSU seniors. There were 1,830 for the same period a year ago.

It is a similar story in the teacher recruitment sector.

Turzanski said the number of interviews declined about 33 per cent to 2,058. There were 99 school districts hunting new teachers here in February and March last year and only 53 this year. The number of recruiters dropped from 222 to 145.

OSU placement services are expanding old techniques and adding new ones to improve services to both students and recruiters.

Roger Westphal, assistant director, said want ads and business sections from newspapers across the country are being combed by graduating seniors in search of jobs.

The bureau makes available the Sunday editions of newspapers from major U. S. cities, and this year they are in great demand. Once, OSU graduates confidently expected jobs in the Fox Valley or close to home. The picture has changed.

There is a letter campaign to employers and school superintendents throughout the state, particularly those who haven't recruited here in the past.

Seniors are encouraged to contact employers by mail and are provided help with preparation of a job and education resume and letters

Executive Candidates Express Views

Outagamie County voters will go to the polls Tuesday to elect their first county executive. The candidates are District Atty. James Long and County Administrator Alvin Woehler.

The winner will serve a four-year term at a time when county government is being looked to more and more as the level of local government most capable of handling our growing problems.

To help the voter better inform himself on where the two candidates stand on some of the major issues, The Post-Crescent has asked both candidates their views on four issue areas.

Below are their replies.

1. What do you view as the solution to the regional planning issue and how do you view the role of regional planning in Outagamie County's future?

Long: Within the next decade, millions of dollars will be invested in planning as we chart the growth of our communities and the preservation of our environment.

If we intend to visibly improve the quality of our lives and those of our children, we must work carefully to tailor a planning structure to our specific needs. To support a planning program that exists solely to propagate the planning profession would be a waste of the taxpayer's money and the professional's time.

That is why I believe the planning structure we select should work at the request and under the direction of our county's elected official. Only when this planning structure is made answerable to the people's representatives will we be assured of seeing plans implemented and our lives changed for the better.

Presently, some of our county's citizens are paying to support two different planning agencies. By January, 1972, we must see that Outagamie County joins a structure including at least the two other members of the Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area — Winnebago and Calumet counties — if we are to get our share of millions of dollars of federal monies.

If I am elected Outagamie County Executive, I will see that our officials are informed of what we must do to comply with federal requirements for these funds; I will work to salvage as much as we can from the planning agencies that have been serving us, and I will make certain plans are formulated and implemented in the interest of the taxpayer.

Woehler: Since it is necessary for Outagamie County to align itself in a planning setup to meet standards for participatory funding, I believe that each of the counties should have its own planner, whether the area involved is three counties or more.

There should be a statistical staff to function as a clearing house and to coordinate the county efforts. This accomplishes a number of things.

First, each county would have control over the assignments given to the planner and the planner would be reflecting the county's needs.

Every dollar spent by the county would go for planning for the county and not for membership fees to support programs in unrelated counties.

This would still have the advantage of a regional review of planning and provide whatever is necessary to coordinate the efforts of the individual counties.

2. What services not now under county jurisdiction should county government take an active role in? List specific programs and services you would initiate.

Woehler: First, there must be some type of coordinated effort at the county level of all law enforcement personnel. I don't propose a county takeover but there should be a better coordinated working relationship of the municipalities to the county.

Park and recreation needs should be reviewed as to jurisdiction. Each municipality that now builds a park has split over attendance from other communities and, in effect, is helping support their park needs.

Within social services, the pensioners (blind aid, disabled aid, etc) should be split from other social services for identification. I think there are different types of services needed for the two classifications.

I don't think the county can do part and the state and federal governments do part. We are now in conflict as to who has jurisdiction. However, if there would be a change to give the local government control, there still should be some

Class Night at KHS to Continue

KAUKAUNA — Senior class members at Kaukauna High School voted recently to continue the class night program prior to graduation night as had been the policy in past years.

A vote was taken after some objections to the night were voiced by class members and a drop off in attendance noted in the past few years. Approximately 70 seniors indicated, on a questionnaire, they would probably not attend this year's program.

Class night consists of introduction of the seniors, speeches, selections by the concert choir and a concert band, musical groups featuring seniors, announcement of scholarship and award winners and introduction of new members of the National Honor Society.

The senior student is free to decide whether he will participate in the program.

Fire Damages 2 Snowmobiles

NEENAH — One snowmobile was badly damaged and another partly burned in a garage fire at 1:40 p.m. Saturday at the Gene Clark residence, 917 Zernlock.

Firemen said that Clark apparently was trying to start one of the snowmobiles in the garage when gasoline leaking from the vehicle ignited.

The inside of the garage roof also was scorched. There was no damage estimate.

Candidates to be On WHBY Tonight

An hour-long program entitled, "Meet the Candidates," will be aired on radio station WHBY, Appleton, beginning at 8 p.m. today.

The program will feature statements by the candidates for Outagamie County Executive, the Appleton Board of Education, Appleton City Council and Kimberly Village President, in Tuesday's elections.

Former Vice President Of Schaefer Dairy Dies Saturday at Home

The former vice-president of Schaefer Dairy Products Co., Appleton, Peter Schaefer, 63, 2005 E. Newberry St., died Saturday in his home.

The firm, started in 1929 by Schaefer and two brothers, was closed in February, 1970. Schaefer was a member of St. Bernadette Parish in Appleton. Survivors are his widow and son.

Funeral arrangements are pending at the Brettschneider-Trettn Funeral Home.

Odyssey Playhouse Meeting Is Today

NEENAH — A public meeting of Odyssey Playhouse, Inc., will be held at 2 p.m. today at the Fellowship Hall of the First Presbyterian Church, 200 Church St.

Purpose of the meeting is to inform the public and prospective members about the purposes and proposed program of Odyssey Playhouse.

Anyone in the Fox Cities who is interested in working with the proposed summer theater program is welcome to attend.

OSU Science Department Grows

Sophisticated Tools Used in Frog Research

BY JOHN MINER
Post-Crescent Staff Writer

OSHKOSH — Current research by two Oshkosh State University biologists may one day mean savings of hundreds of thousands of dollars for people who raise frogs for biological supply houses and for food.

In the longer run, the studies could also save human lives.

Supported by grants from the National Science Foundation and the Board of Regents of Wisconsin State Universities, Dr. M. A. Rouf, chairman of the OSU biology department, is gathering new information about a bacteria which produces what is known as "red leg" disease in frogs.

His associate in the project is Dr. Mary Rigney, associate professor of microbiology. They are assisted by four graduate students.

Latin Name The bug—to give it its Latin name—is Aeromonas hydrophila.

The red leg disease it causes attacks the vascular system of frogs. The mortality rate among infected captive frogs ranges from about 70 to 85 per cent.

"We have already learned enough about the organism and immunity to it," according to Dr. Rouf, "that by taking certain hygienic precautions the incidence of mortality and epidemic outbreaks in supply houses could be controlled." There is some evidence that antibodies to the bacteria are produced by infected frogs, but more work remains to be done in that area.

Frog Capital With two large frog dealers in the community, Oshkosh has acquired the sobriquet of "frog capital of the world."

Marvin B. Emmons, manager of E. G. Steinhilber & Co., said that red leg is apparently a symptom of general ill health in frogs. It can be caused by different things, including bacteria, he added.

Emmons said the Steinhilber concern is seeking to develop "laboratory-conditioned" frogs—animals in good health and actively feeding when they leave Oshkosh for their destination.

William A. Lemberger of the Lemberger Co. commented that red leg has been no problem for his concern in recent years.

Both companies sell frogs throughout the United States and Europe for educational and research purposes.

The bacteria A. hydrophila is a human death.

In humans it can cause gastroenteritis, an ailment associated with dysentery, and septicemia, a form of blood poisoning. Human deaths have been attributed to aeromonas hydro- phila, Dr. Rouf reported. It also attacks fish and rabbits.

He said the university has received about $5,000 over the past three years to carry on the red leg disease study. Most of it is used for salaries of student assistants, for supplies and research materials.

The biology department is hoping for substantially larger federal grants in the future.

The red leg disease project, as well as other biology department research and educational programs, would be impossible were it not for an imposing assortment of highly sophisticated instruments.

Most of them are too complex for the average visitors to biology department laboratories in huge Halsey Science Center to understand, but they're the vital tools of biology students and faculty researchers.

New Equipment Within the past five years alone, according to Dr. Rouf, the department has purchased about $200,000 worth of major equipment through state and federal funds.

The department's annual budget for buying major instruments for teaching and research averages $30,000 in state and federal funds alone.

These tools—and make no mistake about it, most of them are expensive—provide hands-on training for the department's 260 undergraduate students majoring in biology, and for some 50 microbiology and public health majors.

In addition to undergraduates, more than 100 students are working toward master's degrees in microbiology, botany and zoology.

They are taught by a full-time faculty of 33 people, 29 of whom hold the doctoral degree.

Several machines acquired by the biology department in recent months have direct uses in the red leg research program.

Freeze Cultures One of them is an approximately $3,000 lyophilizer, used for freeze-drying bacterial cultures in order to store them for long periods of time—10 or 20 years, say.

In a way, the technique is a forerunner of the new, science-fiction-like field of cryogenics, which involves freezing of human bodies.

Theorists say it may be possible some day for scientists working with technologies and equipment as yet unknown to revive the dead and cure the year-old sophomore from Black Creek who organized the area's

Also used by Drs. Rouf and Rigney in their studies of frog disease is a fraction collector, which separates the elements of protein or enzyme samples, and high frequency sound producing devices which encourage all people to do something about it at home since all are affected by the problem.

The $2,000 fraction collector, also known as a fractometer, is presently serving to purify antibodies produced by frogs and has lined up speak-

SEAC is aiming for a four-week program for the first weeks of April — the first is junk collection week; then cleanup week; education week, including speakers, teach-ins, field trips, and collection week, drives for bottles and cans for recycling.

The group is trying to raise money for a nature study area, and plans to seek solutions for environmental problems. The SEAC executive committee has handled most planning, under the guidance of teacher advisers and two Northeastern representatives, including Steven Power, biologist.

Green Bay Work The governor's proclamation and ecological activities at Green Bay — probably the most active area in the Fox Valley — were spearheaded by the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay and Miss Nancy Jochman, a 19-year-old sophomore from Black Creek who organized the area's Environmental Action Committee. Rigney in their studies of frog disease is a fraction collector, which separates the elements of protein or enzyme samples, and high frequency sound producing devices which encourage all people to do something about it at home since all are affected by the problem.

Action Plan It also has encouraged city adoption of a ban-the-can ordinance produced by frogs and has lined up speak-

There's something in me, kosh and surrounding communities do not advocate nude entertainment in bars, they would do kosh State University sophomore majoring in social welfare, said he asked five professors to sign the protest but was refused.

The Lukers believe that the success of the rock musical "Hair" may have helped make nudity more acceptable to some, in at least half a dozen city and rural taverns."

Signed by some 1,500 people, the protests urged public officials "to use whatever means possible to put a halt to this immoral entertainment."

The protest forms, which were circulated in Catholic and Protestant churches, and elsewhere, declared that "these (nude) acts have gone far beyond merely dancing, and directly or indirectly are affecting the lives of our youth by the lenient and indifferent attitude shown by the courts in our state."

Mrs. Luker is the mother of eight children, ranging in age from 1 to 19 years.

She said she has no first-hand information about nude entertainment "but I've talked with Bank, of Appleton, and a few people who have."

Mrs. Luker said she first learned about nude dancing in Oshkosh bars through a recent Milwaukee Journal story.

She said the protest was circulated because she and friends "want to let our officials know that many of us are opposed to this kind of thing."

"I think it's wrong," she added, "for us just to say 'oh, isn't that terrible' and then not try to do something about it. At least, we can let people know we're against it."

One Fox Cities area student said there was an attempt to stimulate adult interest but it met with little success.

Most schools are planning at least a day or several days of speeches, awareness projects or continued study of environment in science or social studies classes. Others are planning to collect and haul recyclable materials to a Burlington company or have built bins where persons can dump disposables for recycling.

One organization, the Students Environmental Activities Council (SEAC) has attempted to stimulate and coordinate college and high school students' activities throughout northeastern Wisconsin. The group hasn't been especially effective outside the Fox Cities area but many area students are participating in it.

"We're trying to get the large student body of northeastern Wisconsin involved in the environment movement since we're the ones who are going to live with it and so probably should help clean it up," said Jeffrey Larson, Hortonville High junior and SEAC chairman.

ers, such as former Secretary of Interior Stewart Udall, Gov. Patrick Lucey, U.S. Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis. It plans to maintain a speakers bureau.

The committee and SEAC each have stimulated church interest.

SEAC convinced the Appleton Clergy Association to pass a resolution declaring April 18 Environmental Sunday when ecological topics should be discussed. The Green Bay group has involved clergymen in the recycling promotion.

The Concerned Housewives group in Green Bay has been promoting the use of detergents without phosphates. It also demonstrated recently at a supermarket which it was felt, has displayed a concern for ecology.

At Appleton, about 150 Einstein Junior High students will be going door-to-door to collect bottles and cans for hauling to Burlington for recycling. They will cover Appleton north of College Avenue, apparently driven by parents, during vacation April 12-17.

Fox Cities Effort

There may be an effort to increase this project to more schools and cover the entire Fox Cities area.

Highlands Elementary School is planning an April 22 Earth-day of ecologically-oriented programs, including a survey of areas of adult concern in environmental problems. An evening PTA program will include a speaker on ecology and a film.

Appleton East High is planning a half-day program April 22 with 12 separate speakers enabling students to pick sessions to attend. They also may view a film.

At Wilson Junior High, two ninth grade government teachers are spending April emphasizing ecological awareness. Recycling of wastes is the central theme.

Can Pick-Up

Neenah's Tullar Elementary School is planning a citywide can collection. It has also made 30 and 50 gallon barrels, which will be painted and distributed to service stations as litter barrels.

Lakeview Elementary School is planning a debate on the public address system, and are making buttons, scrap books and surveying the community, industry and student concern about the environment.

Junior High Push

The junior highs will have a photo contest, judging good and bad environmental scenes in the community, and a writing contest. Speakers and units on pollution and environment are slated. The high school band will study noise, the history class the SST and offshore drilling. Other classes will participate in activities, including field trips.

Community Interest

All Neenah schools will participate and there is an effort to gain community involvement.

At Kimberly high school students will meet with younger students in wooded areas to discuss ecology. They also will study population growth and its effects on the environment.

Little Chute public schools are planning a general cleanup through the high school science club.

At Kaukauna, an all-school festival April 25 will stress the dual idea of the use of mass media in the community and its usefulness in ecological pursuits. The day comes at the end of Environmental Week and follows a letter to schools by Sen. Nelson.

Oshkosh Program

Oshkosh schools have no specific projects but are pursuing ecological discussions in biology and social science classes. The system is reorganizing and in the fall of 1971 may develop new ideas in environmental programs.

Fond du Lac students in all schools are joining in a program to encourage recycling on a permanent basis. They are going door-to-door first with handbills explaining the economic and environmental benefits of recycling, then asking residents to clean and separate glass and leave it on curbs April 24 for pickup by students. It will be taken to Burlington for recycling.

There are other in-school projects, including an elementary school poster contest. Numerous projects are planned by Green Bay schools, including collection of bottles for recycling and an environmental contest for fifth graders. An environmental workshop for staff on a voluntary basis also is planned to stimulate ideas for use at all grade levels.

American Can Co. and three other major producers of cans are extending their regional can recycling campaign to a nationwide program.

The plan calls for the opening of nearly 200 recycling centers throughout the United States by the end of 1971 and marks the first industry collection program for all types of metal cans in the country. As of today, 75 centers have been opened in 13 states.

Industry Aid

As part of the program the can companies will donate the services of their metal can manufacturing facilities as collection centers for steel, tinplate, aluminum and bi-metal cans. All metal cans will be accepted, including food, soup, beer, soft drink, pet food cans and other metal containers.

Participating companies in the program are four of the world's largest producers of metal cans: American Can. of Greenwich, Conn., with Fox Valley operations; Continental Can Co.; National Can Corp. and The Heekin Can Co. The companies are members of the Carbonated Beverage Container Manufacturers Association.

Appleton homeowners soon may be paying more for milk. Farmers got a raise Thursday as milk price support levels went into effect throughout the nation. Now processors seem faced with higher prices for raw milk and many are uncertain about future prices.

There has been little change in Appleton, however, as homogenized milk sold at most stores Saturday for 93 cents per gallon.

"We anticipate an increase in the near future," said a dairy official today.

The increased price support payment sparked the change. The payments place a floor on the price for manufactured dairy products. The hike announced by Secretary of Agriculture Clifford Hardin is 27 cents more per hundredweight for raw milk than previous levels.

Not all officials say this means milk prices will increase. "We have to wait and see in May if anything happened to the Wisconsin-Minnesota pricing series," said Francis Haug, marketing economist with the state agriculture department.

The Wisconsin-Minnesota Series is a sampling of prices paid by select dairies for manufacturing-grade milk. It establishes the basis for milk pricing in the nation. Milk for bottling sells for $1.26 per hundredweight more than the manufacturing-grade milk which is used for cheese, butter, and other products.

Cheese prices may be unaffected because they already are selling for more than the price support level, Haug said. Butter will be worth slightly less under the new formula. This could mean the price of milk could dip, predicted Haug.

But dairy operators disagree. "I'm usually told when the price goes up to the farmer and then it's just a matter of time," said one.

Wait and See

One spokesman said the dairy operators now are waiting for pace-setters such as Borden Foods Inc., and Sealtest, Inc., in Milwaukee to make a decision.

This morning the price for home delivery of milk at the Borden plant was unchanged. Sealtest General Manager R. W. Morrison declined to comment saying, "No price increase has been announced."

In Appleton, Jerome Fischer, owner of Utschig Dairy, expected an increase in price. "I think it's going to go up all the way across the board."

He said his prices will be maintained at the present time. "I think the co-ops will more or less take the lead." Co-op officials indicated they still are undecided.

Richard Lamers, owner of Lamers Dairy, Kimberly, backed up Fischer. "I would imagine there would be an increase; there would have to be."

Now milk prices at Appleton and Green Bay are 93 cents per gallon. In Oshkosh, stores report $1.03 prices per gallon.

One Green Bay store manager indicated, however, that both Morning Glory and Fairmont Foods distributors had indicated that cottage cheese prices will increase within the next week.

A Fairmont Foods Inc. official at Green Bay declined to comment on a possible price hike.

In Appleton, Richard Grishaber, of the Grishaber Grocery Store, said the price may rise. "I imagine it will go, there isn't that much profit in milk now."

He said price cuts have sliced profit margins nearly in half from levels a year earlier.

"I imagine we'll find out in the next couple of days."

Grand Chute Alters Date Of Meeting

Annual Session
Week After Vote
To Fill Town Posts

The Town of Grand Chute will hold its annual meeting April 13 beginning at 8 p.m.

Last year, board members voted to schedule this year's annual meeting one week after election, according to Town Clerk Leslie Woldt. That vote is required by state law.

Woldt said both town polling places will be open for voters from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Tuesday.

First precinct voters can cast ballots at the Town Hall, 502 W. Northland Ave. Second precinct residents vote at the American Legion Club, 3220 W. College Ave.

Races have developed for the town's two supervisor posts, and the offices of treasurer and constable.

Two of three candidates will fill the supervisor posts Tuesday. Incumbent Edward Ziegler, route 3, is seeking another term. Also running are newcomers, James Gasper, 1330 W. Elsner Road, and Gerald W. Capelle, 3610 W. Florida Ave.

Bernard Tillman, the town's other present supervisor, announced earlier he would not run again.

Vying for the vacated post of treasurer are, George D. Froelich, 1502 S. Van Dyke St., and Mrs. William L. (Betty) Blohm, 2617 First Ave. Treasurer Eugene Paltzer previously announced he would not seek reelection.

Incumbent Constable John Arft, 415 Sunset Ave., is opposed by David Neubert, 5636 N. Richmond St.

Three of the town's present officers, including Chairman Ira Livingston, will not be opposed. Livingston will begin his second term. Woldt will start his 12th, and John Stevens, his seventh as assessor.

Ask Them Yourself

FOR CLIFFORD HARDIN,
Secretary of Agriculture

How can you permit the latest 30-percent fat content in hot dogs when doctors warn against animal fat to prevent heart attacks, hardening of arteries, etc. in adults, not to mention adding to teen-age acne?—Mrs. C. Hooker Young, Wellsboro, Pa.

Effective in October of 1969 (against substantial opposition), the Consumer and Marketing Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture finally succeeded in putting a top limit on the fat content of hot dogs. The 30-percent limit is below the previous industry average. It also made many people aware of the fat content of hot dogs for the first time. Dietary needs differ. Hot dogs are a nutritious food for many people. Those for whom dietary fat is a problem should follow their doctor's advice.

FOR JOHN KENNETH CALBRAITH, economist

A friend said you once were President Nixon's "boss." Is this true?—L. R. Edwards, Dunedin, Fla.

Yes, in 1941, when I was Deputy Administrator of the Office of Price Administration, Mr. Nixon was employed by that department. So was Mrs. Nixon.

FOR ELIZABETH POST, etiquette expert

Recently I remarried, and I was wearing an engagement ring. The minister asked me, after the wedding ring was on, to wear it the way it was. That made the engagement ring closest to me. I would like to know what is the proper way to wear wedding rings? Most people change them after the wedding.—Mrs. Geraldine Jones, Gulfport, Miss.

The wedding ring goes on the finger first and the engagement ring on the outside.

FOR BENNETT CERF, publisher

As a collector of puns, which is your favorite?—D. Deutsch, Jamaica, N.Y.

My current favorite is: an eccentric old gentleman left everything he had to his favorite grandson. Unfortunately, all that he had was 347 clocks of every variety and description. Now the poor grandson has to spend his entire time winding up the estate!

FOR WARREN ORLICK, president of Professional Golfers Association

Has any pro golfer played in all PGA Tournaments sponsored in any one year?—Bill Hill, Langdon, N.D.

Assuming you mean in recent years, no, because there are more than 40 tournaments scheduled each year. It becomes physically, mentally, and emotionally impossible for one player to compete in every scheduled event. Occasionally, two tournaments are held concurrently, and this adds to the impossibility of playing all tournaments.

FOR HOWARD PYLE,
President, National Safety Council

A friend recently had a car crash when the vacuum created by a passing trailer truck threw his camping trailer out of control. Are such accidents common, and what can a motorist do when he sees a heavy vehicle about to pass him in such a spot?—Margaret E. Fish, Manchester, Conn.

The National Safety Council in its 64-page "Travel Safety Guide and Road Atlas" states in its chapter, "The Tricks of Trailer Towing," what to do when a truck passes: "Being Passed—Air turbulence from a large truck or bus will push your trailer to the right. But the gust will move along the trailer immediately and tend to correct the sway. So don't brake."

FOR SEN. MARGARET CHASE SMITH, Maine

Is it true that you draw retirement pay from the Air Force?—Leo L. Smith, Chicago, Ill.

I am a retired Air Force Reservist, but I do not draw any retirement pay for this status, never have, and never will.

FOR JOE KLAAS, author of "Amelia Earhart Lives"

To whom was Amelia Earhart married? Is he still living and what is he doing now?—Michael Barna, San Luis Obispo, Calif.

Amelia Earhart was married to Publisher George Palmer Putnam when she disappeared on her round-the-world flight on July 2, 1937. Putnam inherited her considerable property after Superior Court at Los Angeles declared her legally dead on New Year's Day, 1939.

Amelia Earhart was his second wife. Putnam remarried two more times before he died in January, 1950, in Trona, Calif. He was 63. Before he died, he was ghost writer of a movie, "Flight to Freedom," which portrayed his aviatrix wife having flown an espionage flight for the United States.

FOR GOV. WILLIAM A. EGAN, Alaska

Of all of Alaska's big game, which is the most sought after by hunters?—Viola Jaeb, Humboldt, Saskatchewan, Canada

The most sought after is the Dall or white sheep. It furnishes a beautiful trophy and provides a challenge to the hunter, who has to ascend mountains to hunt them.

FOR JIMMY DURANTE

Why did you, at age 78, go back to work after a three-month recuperation from a collapse attributed to exhaustion?—Mrs. John Cole, Detroit, Mich.

What am I going to do if I don't work? Stay at home? I've been to Niagara Falls. I've been to Paris. So what is there left for me to see? I'm just happy I'm able to work. The people will tell me when to quit.

FOR DR. DONALD DUKELOW, Assistant Director, American Medical Association

What is hysterical blindness?—Rudolph More, Cary, Ind.

Hysteria is an emotional factor in which certain nerves develop functional inadequacies in the absence of any indication of physical pathology. Often these are associated with emotional problems, even occasionally some forms of psychosis. The most common varieties have to do with paralysis of some of the motor or sensory nerves. In the same way, a hysterical blindness would be the inability to see in the presence of what appears to be a perfectly normal eye and nerve track in a person who is highly susceptible to suggestions or who, for some reason or other, is "benefited" by the inability to see.

FOR ELIZABETH MONTGOMERY, actress

Both my husband and I come from Salem, Mass. Although we left there many years ago, we were surprised that we don't recognize the Salem of our youth in the recent "Bewitched" episodes that were said to have been shot in Salem. Were they authentic shots of Salem?—Mary B. Galley, Maybrook, N.Y.

The episodes that were listed as being shot in Salem, Mass., were indeed shot there. It probably has changed a good deal in the last decade.

FOR MELVIN LAIRD, Secretary of Defense

Are the servicemen in Vietnam the only ones allowed to have "R&R" (rest and recuperation), or can other men overseas be allowed this privilege?—Lois Rudisill, Boyce, La.

The current Rest and Recuperation Program is applicable only to the personnel involved in Vietnam. No other overseas area today offers this privilege. Criteria utilized to ascertain eligibility for R&R privileges include exposure to a combat environment on a daily or recurring basis. For example, during the Korean conflict, we had an R&R program for our military personnel serving in that country.

Nuns Blossom in New Roles

five Green Bay Diocese schools, became Air Force Lt. Nancy Eagan, a graduate from the school of aerospace medicine who is now a flight nurse.

The School Sisters of Notre Dame, with 13 schools in the diocese, boast of one of theirs who is a crew member of the floating hospital ship SS Hope.

One of the more capable dentists in the area is Sister Florita Schneider a Manitowoc Franciscan, who graduated at the top of her class of Marquette, topping all the men and the one other woman. She also happened to be a nun and right up there.

The list of deeds goes on and on and on. Some of them are controversial because they involve controversial issues.

Others are controversial because they show nuns in the roles of concerned but plain human beings — a role some laymen aren't used to.

"I suppose it's tough to swallow some things," said an Appleton sister pointing to a headline in a national magazine which read: "Nun Turns Gun-toting Cop to Help with Drug Problem."

The story below states: Sister Cornelia never steps out of her habit but each day after morning prayers, she returns to her convent room and straps on a leather belt hung with a loaded .38 revolver, a bullet pouch and handcuffs and drives to the police department to report for duty."

The nun is helping drug addicts and runaways, so it isn't her apostolate which is raising the controversy. It's simply the fact that the ex-major who served in Korea and who now uses judo when needed is out of character for a nun and to the layman.

"Too often the people won't accept when we step out of the mold in which they see us," commented Sister Angella Masalski, a Notre Dame, principal of St. Mary High School, Menasha, who may have the appearance of a soft-spoken, conservative sister, but whose "mold" has included years and years of work in the inner city of Chicago and Milwaukee.

"We are expanding our apostolates (types of work) and freedoms — freedom to travel, and join organizations, attend meetings, go to theatres and in general feel out the world," Sister Angella added.

Freedom: that's the nail on the head.

And so there's Sister Lorna Zemke, from Oshkosh, a candidate for a doctorate in music who conducted research in Hungary and Sister Ambrosette Pfeuffer, a Brillion girl who made good as a Franciscan, who designs and builds facilities with St. Paul Home in Kaukauna, a prime source of pride.

Freedom came and they joined organizations that took them out at nights, into city halls to fight for rights of others and, in some cases, contract for their own jobs.

An Appleton nun who is in charge of the religious education program at a local church is the only one from her order in the state. She got the job by answering a newspaper ad.

"The mold is gone but laymen can't quite accept us for what we are," says Sister Susan Farmer, an art teacher at Xavier High School. The changes, it seems, have been easier to accept by the nuns themselves than by laymen.

"There were some pains, especially for the older sisters, but we have not had uprisings," recalled Sister Catherine.

Within the orders, very few have objected to the changes, it's true. But Rome hasn't always been too keen on some innovations, as witnessed recently by the School Sisters of St. Francis, a Milwaukee order with four schools in this diocese.

There have been a number of exchanges with the Vatican, with a letter from the Holy See rebuking them for indulging in "permissiveness, exaggerated personalism, tendency to identify with the world, and uncontrolled experimentation."

A rebuke of this type in years past could have made many scurry to investigate the reason for the charge — (if indeed there would have been grounds for it) but Sister Francis Borgea, the head of the 100-year-old order recently issued a cool statement, saying "Our new directions are certain to be continued."

And then she made one more declaration. She declined to discuss the issue any further by mail with the Vatican, telling those in charge of the charges she would be "willing to engage in a personal dialogue."

Sister Francis Borgia, the superior, is hardly a young radical of the new ilk. She's a nun in her 40's, indicative of the fact that change is welcomed by the truly concerned — regardless of age or order.

Not all of the changes are of the headline-making types. And not all of the sisters involved in it are young and in the ghettos.

There are plenty of both in the Fox Valley.

"Wherever I am, there is the vocation," commented Sister Angella, adding, "I don't have to teach in the inner city to know I have a job to do. I didn't join because I wanted to suffer for God but because this type of life made me happy. It was a positive attraction."

That same feeling is expressed by Sister Catherine, who also has worked with Head Start, and in the core city schools as well as in the wealthiest Chicago suburb.

"Sure there's a great need in the ghettos but there also is a need for our services here because these will be the leaders of tomorrow, in whose power it may be to change the ghettos," she stated.

Both of the sisters, who took their vows in the solid 50's, have weathered the changes with an optimism that reflects a solid future.

Sister Susan, a child of the new and uncertain era, now in her 20's, admits to having had some questions about her vocation but agrees with her older colleagues that it's not where you are, but what you are trying to do.

"We have to guard against the tendency to think that the middle class doesn't need religion."

"A few years ago I asked myself, what was I doing here. Why wasn't I out serving the poor. Why was I with the middle class."

"And then I realized that not everyone is meant for the ghettos. There's a lot of truth in the statement: "Bloom where you are planted."

In 1971, the emphasis is certainly on the bloom. Despite the numbers of nuns leaving, those who are staying are hardly dying on the vine.

Quite the opposite. They seem to be springing up in the wildest crannies and blossoming with a strange new vigor.

Executive Candidates Express Views on Issues type of higher level policing to avoid local discrimination.

Long: Under the county executive, county government should keep a watchful eye out to be sure it is functioning in those areas where it is the logical unit to provide services of the highest quality at the lowest price.

Some proposals we should consider in the near future include the following:

Police Check Claim That Girl Was Accosted

Police are investigating the complaint of a 14-year-old Appleton girl who told them she was accosted by a man Friday night while walking in the 800 block of S. Douglas Street.

The man, described as in his late twenties or early thirties, appeared from behind a fence she said, and put his right hand over her mouth and his left arm around her waist.

She bit his hand, wrestled loose, and ran, she told police. An employee of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad called authorities at 9:47 p.m. when the girl showed up at the W. Second Street depot and gave her story.

The girl told authorities her assailant, who didn't speak, wore a blue jacket with hood, and dark trousers. He fled west on foot through a parking lot after the incident, she said.

Trial Continues On Attempted Rape of Coeds

MANITOWOC, Wis. (AP) — The case of a Milwaukee man charged with the attempted rape of three coeds was continued to Wednesday after County Judge Harold Mueller refused Friday to accept a guilty plea to one of the counts.

John J. Watson, 49, is accused of picking up three 19-year-old University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee coeds March 20 and forcing them to disrobe. The girls said they fled nude from his car to a farmhouse near Two Rivers.

Dist. Atty. Allan Doehr said he would review the other two counts of attempted rape and announce at Wednesday's hearing whether or not he will drop them.

Appleton High Schools Plan Exchange Concert Tours During April

Exchange concerts and tours are planned by the music organizations of the two Appleton public high schools.

On Wednesday, the AHS-East orchestra, directed by Mrs. Evelyn Wilke, will perform at Memorial High in Madison. This is part of an exchange program which began last year when the Madison Orchestra performed at East.

On April 28 and 29 the East wind symphony will tour the Wausau, Stevens Point, Schofield area, performing at the high schools.

The AHS-West concert band also has planned a trip. They will perform at the Centennial High School in Champaign, Ill., May 7 and attend the Chicago Symphony Youth Concert on the return trip. The Centennial band, in turn, will play at West April 30.

Landfill . . . The ultimate solution to solid waste disposal is recycling, but in the meantime, county government must offer relief by selecting and operating a landfill site. The time to act is now, when so many communities can no longer solve the problem without outside help. County government must assume the responsibility beginning with the selection of a site that is easily accessible without being an affront to citizens or nature.

Drug Rehabilitation . . . On an almost daily basis, someone in this county is required to answer the question, "What do I do with my child who has fallen victim to drug abuse?" Outagamie County must provide a first-rate facility where these youngsters who have mistakenly damaged their minds can be treated and returned to society as useful, productive citizens.

Computer sharing . . . In the past four years, this county has spent more than $90,000 on computer equipment, most of which is obsolete. It is unfortunate that this amount of money has been spent to purchase outdated equipment outright, when virtually every major industry leases systems that can be replaced when they become obsolete.

Before we spend any more money, I propose we consider leasing a total computer system on a sharing basis with all other units of government in the county. This would provide us with maximum, up-to-date service at minimal cost.

3. What do you view as the relationship between the county executive and other elected officials? (e.g., constitutional county officers, county board and the judiciary).

Long: I believe the county executive's prime responsibility will be to restore pride and confidence in county government. His success will depend on his ability to build a relationship of trust and respect between himself and the other elected officials.

The county executive must be a man who puts his own interests aside to carry out his duties in the spirit of cooperation.

If he is to lead effectively, the county executive must be able to communicate his own sense of mission to all elected officials and to share with them the responsibility he feels to the public.

Because ultimately he is the one who will have to account for the outcome of the next four years, the county executive must unite the officials to work for the benefit of the taxpayer; he must fully inform them of the issues so they can act wisely, and he must exercise his power of approval or veto in the interest of the public.

Woehler: With the county board, the executive must have the ability of cooperation. He must recognize that one is legislative and the other administrative. It is not necessary for one to get in the other's way as to develop an abrasive relationship. Both must look at the transition necessary after April 6 and recognize each other's statutory rights.

With the other officials and judiciary, those offices should not be excluded from any request for an administrative review. It is the responsibility of the executive to review all offices for administrative overlap, under or over staffing, and he must relate present and future staffing as we make a critical review for future automation. For example, in many areas courts are going to using tape recorders for court reporting.

4. How would you make county government more effective in terms of services provided for the amount of local tax dollars spent?

Woehler: First, we must recognize that the county should provide certain services to people and that in providing those services I believe we must first face the primary problem.

We must adjust in some manner the assessment of taxes against nonusers of the services.

By maintaining the level of assessments we are actually increasing the cost of services to the users if they are property holders. Those who do not use the services and the retired or those on restricted income are jeopardizing their very existence with this level of tax.

Tax relief must be programmed for these people and the county can help itself through consolidations of related and essential institutional services, staffs and programs; and then take the various departmental (airport, highway, etc.) and relate their responsibilities to staff, administrative requirements and equipment needs. There must be interdepartmental use of equipment.

A recommendation has been made that there be better direction from the county board to its committees if we are to have necessary state statutes changed to provide more complete home rule for county government.

This can only be done with a strong recommendation from the local legislative body.

One of the most effective ways to accomplish this is by a strong review by the county executive in the budget area. A sound budget will reflect that he has made effective review procedures with the respective departments.

Long: The county executive must be able to guarantee the taxpayer he will get his money's worth for every tax dollar spent.

That is why it is imperative that under his leadership, Outagamie County formulate and follow a clearly defined purchasing policy. The present haphazard methods are costing us thousands of dollars that could be saved if we would first determine our requirements, then allow bids only from firms we know can do the job. We would then be in a position to accept the low bid.

The sale of property of value but no longer of use to the county is another area where county government must operate more effectively for the taxpayer's benefit. Such property should be sold to the highest bidder at public auctions. These sales conducted by the sheriff can net the county thousands of dollars.

A third area of concern is the defense of people accused of crimes who cannot afford attorneys. I have proposed Outagamie County hire two attorneys on a retainer basis at $8,000 apiece annually. By setting a ceiling of $16,000 on the defense of indigents, we could save taxpayers $15,000 this year alone and thousands more in years to come.

The county executive must accept responsibility for all departments and facets of county government. A more responsive welfare board can improve that department, close cooperation with the jail building committee can result in an early completion date and enforcement of Wisconsin's antisecrecy law eliminating secret meetings can assure taxpayers their tax dollars are being properly spent.
